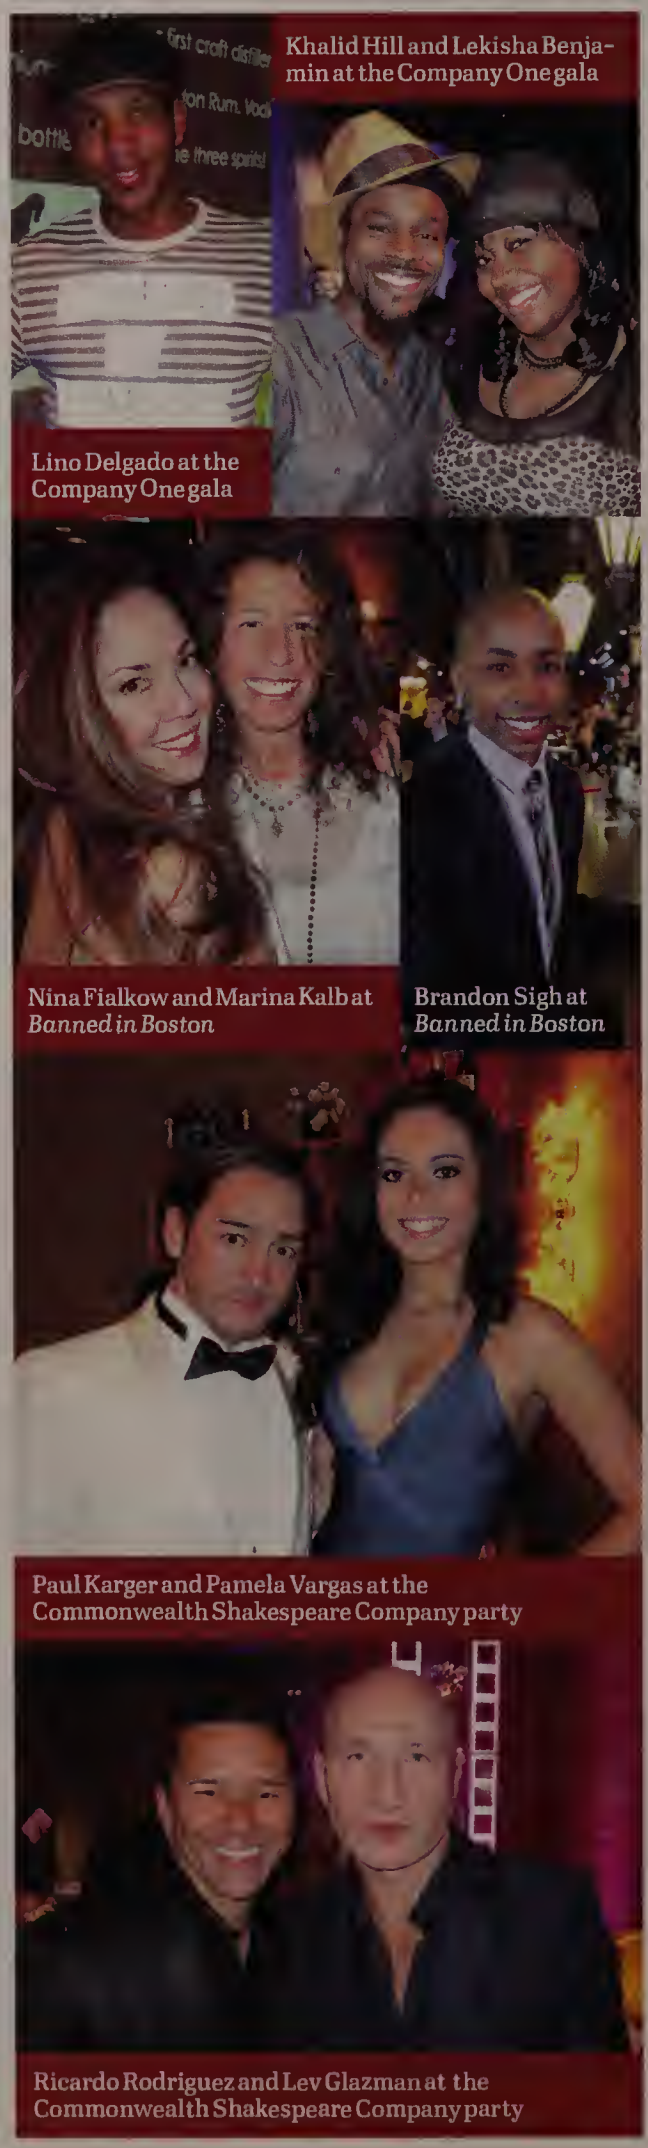
Not Your Daddy's Gala

Food? Check. Booze? Check. Silent auction? Check. But that's about all Company One's 13th annual gala, held at the Cyclorama, had in common with most fund-raisers. Besides producing world-class theater, it knows how to throw down, which was accomplished in rare style.

The crowd was an eclectic amalgam that included dapper hipster Devin Hill, the aptly named Summer Williams, tireless supporter Victoria Marsh, Chestnut Hillbilly Rachael Goldfarb, the ubiquitous Janet Wu, legal eagle Matthew Kozol, restaurateur Jim Solomon, moonshine makers Dave and Will Willis, the ever-smiling Giuseppe Frustacci, northern goddess Freya McCaie, travel titan Jim Moses, and the guys from Goorin Bros. hat shop, who put a lid on it for any guest who wanted one (and lots did).



But it was the entertainment that knocked the gala out of the ballpark, with graffiti artists tagging giant canvases around the room while DJ Saucy Lady and the Audio Chemists kept the dance floor pumping, and performances by the likes of Khalid Hill, Lekisha Benjamin and Lino Delgado and his world-renowned Bboy band, Floorlords, left everyone's jaw on the floor.

Best of all: there was no discernible dress code, just amazing painting, singing and dancing, which elicited the evening's funniest remark. While clapping for a dancer spinning on his head on the brick floor, one guest said, "My chiropractor would definitely not approve."

Hey Kids, Let's Put on a Show!

For two decades, Urban Improv has been mounting what can only be described as a must-be-seen-to-be-believed spectacular called Banned in Boston, and this year's original musical revue, starring local celebrities from all walks of fame, was staged at House of Blues.

Spotted before the show, sipping cocktails and nibbling tasty tidbits from top local chefs, were such boldfaced names as Red Sox grand poobah David Ginsberg, Vicky (Mrs. Thomas Handasyd Perkins, 14th) Whitney, basketball star Mike Glew and the flawless Kelly, tall drink of water Ranch Kimball and the stunning Dr. Alexa Boer, yummy mummy Megan Woods and her restaurateur husband, Seth, and one woman who seemed to be dreading the show and asked, "How long is it, compared to, say, The Ring Cycle?"

Brandon Sigh at Banned in Boston

Paul Karger and Pamela Vargas at the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company party

Ricardo Rodriguez and Lev Glazman at the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company party

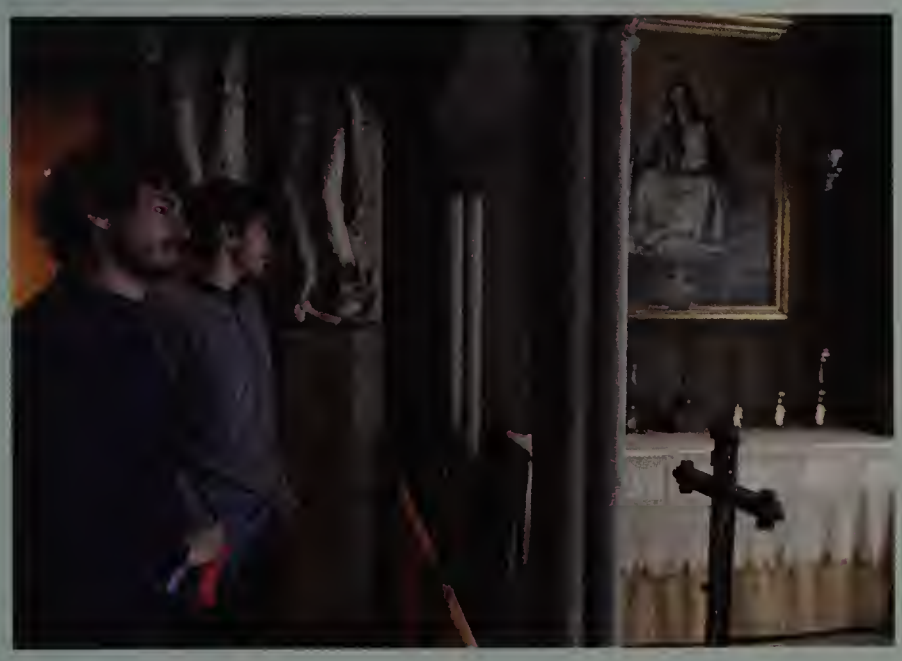
However, the production was as clever, original and uproarious as ever. A few highlights: Broadway actress Nancy Anderson imitating Madonna in a number called "Text Yourself," a Glee satire called Glum, chef Lydia Shire smoking a cigarette, Aerosmith axman Tom Hamilton "winning" as Charlie Sheen and city councilor Ayanna Pressley channeling Oprah, while every elected official from Sen. Scott Brown to Gov. Deval Patrick made utter and complete asses of themselves.

However, by far the funniest moment came when a bartender told a guest that no more alcohol would be served until everyone was seated for the show. The man responded, "It's physically impossible for me to sit down without a vodka and tonic in my hand."

It Provokes the Desire but Takes Away the Performance

The spirit of Falstaff was alive and well in the Mandarin Oriental, Boston ballroom when the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company (the folks who bring you free Shakespeare on the Common every summer) held its annual party, Cinema Italiano.

The crowd was very Sophia Loren and Marcello Mastrianni and included the likes of banking twins Paul and Wes Karger with their beauty queens, Ashley Bickford and Pamela Vargas, board member and Bard expert Will Lyman, legal eagle Daniel Kelly, the impossibly hot Mark Schwindenhammer, PR princess Marlo Fogelman and photographer Eric Levin, whose contribution to the raucous goings-on was a tricked out photo booth resembling a Roman cafe, which guests couldn't get enough of.



Meanwhile, the entertainment during dinner included a sketch during which yours truly was pulled up on stage and coerced into wearing a coconut bra and a mop on my head. I'm assuming this was an audition, and therefore would like to officially announce that I'll be playing the role of Coriolanus in this summer's production... and if this turns out not to be true, I'll refund your money. ×××

Blow Fish

Years ago, on one of those Mediterranean nights when your eyes still strain from the diamond mesh of wave and sun, the afternoon's heat still tautens your face and the salt air rolls your appetite around your midriff like a hollow ball, I walked into a waterfront Greek taverna. A guidebook had recommended the place, and the outdoor tables crowded with men in woolen caps and unshaved women seemed good assurance, as did the smell: black tobacco, heavy streaks of olive oil and wood-charred sardines, a vivid slash of garlic. Unversed in Greek, we made baboonish gestures at the specials board and trusted to the Fates.

Adam DeTour

Our waiter smiled politely, said something that sounded like, "malaka pousti," and disappeared.

After half an hour and a bottle of retsina, my stomach felt like it had sprouted titanium claws. Eventually, our waiter returned with two plump fish steaks, cut perpendicular to the spine and fretted with parsley. Golden oil beaded the grill marks, the skin crackled at the touch and the ivory flesh steamed under an aroma of lemon and brine.

After a bite, my friend said, "Is it supposed to taste like that?"

"I don't think so. No. It can't."

Another forkful, this time more timid.

"What do you think that flavor is?"

"It's kind of like liver. But really more like something's ass."

We trudged back our hostel that evening with two bags of corn chips and a keen skepticism in the opinions of guidebooks.

This issue, on the other hand, is an utterly trustworthy guide to the finest seafood dishes in the city.

Good Eats

Toast of the Town

Regulars of Rino's Place knew the routine: Put your name in, then walk around the block to Kelley's Square Pub to kill an hour or three while you wait for a table.

But in January, the DiCenso family took over an available space across the street from their always-mobbed Italian kitchen, and now they're hosting the spillover crowd themselves. As the name suggests, Prima e Dopo (before and after) is a place to bookend your carb-loading with wines on tap and "snacks" like platter-length slabs of bruschetta. Available in roasted red pepper and goat cheese, or garlicky shrimp scampi with creamy pesto, these knife-and-fork numbers will whet your appetite, or send it delectably over the edge.

SHINING CHARDONNAYS

People love to say the word "chardonnay." It sounds so sophisticated. Although, or maybe because, it remains the top choice among the general public, you rarely hear sommeliers singing its praises. I'm a big fan, and love introducing people who say, "I hate chardonnay," to bottles that showcase the grape's ability to please any palate.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

The predominant style is oak-aged, and this is the type that takes the most public bashing. Strong oaky flavors aren't as fashionable as they were a decade ago, but the texture and nuance that develops in a wine with time spent in a barrel creates a rich, complex flavor profile that has nothing to do with "woody." If I'm grilling fish or enjoying a steamed lobster, one of my favorite choices is a well-balanced, oak-aged California chardonnay. Are there a lot of exaggerated, over-oaked chardonnays still on the market? Of course. The good news is that many winemakers have learned to tone that quality down, matching their oak treatment to the more important characteristics (fruit, spice, body, texture) of their wines. These three selections are among the best I've tasted this year in a medium price range.

Hook & Ladder Chardonnay
Russian River Valley, 2010 ($20, Urban Grape) Produced by the De Loach family, this is a smooth, luscious chardonnay that combines butterscotch and lemon in equal proportions. It's got great spice and a toasty vanilla richness. This is one of those "tastes more expensive than it is" wines. It's a good drink all by itself as well as with grilled shrimp or scallops.

Laetitia Estate Chardonnay
Arroyo Grande Valley, San Luis Obispo, 2010 (Ball Square Fine Wines, $18) This chardonnay offers a whiff of baking bread, wood smoke, caramel and apple. With intense tropical fruit flavor, its round texture and clean, bracing acids are beautifully balanced. A great choice for grilled fish.

J Vineyards Chardonnay
Russian River Valley, 2009 ($28, Boston Wine Exchange) Delicately scented with hints of herb and toasted grain, this is a soft, creamy-textured wine made in a fashion that'll appeal to fans of white Burgundy. The wood spice is understated, and hints of apple and pear linger on the palate. So delicate it can serve as an aperitif, but substantial enough to work with crab or lobster.

VEGGING OUT

TO @MEANWAITER FROM THE MAY 23 ISSUE: I know we're all very happy to let women be free and bold and utterly untethered, but the b* called "MeanWaiter" really crossed the line. Vegetarians are very particular, and if your customer repeatedly asked whether you understood his specific requests, you ought to have humored him and served him respectfully. The fact that you added prosciutto in his chowder absolutely fills me with revulsion for you. As an observant Muslim, if I'd been served by you and met a similar fate, I would've put chivalry aside and slapped you silly 'til your fing molars fell out, you hateful harridan!

The perfectionist meal orderer

To the girl on the Orange Line Thursday morning:

It was bad enough that you practically bowled my sister over in your rush to get a seat, but then when you decided to eat your crunchy apple right in my ear, slurping the juice as you got to the core, well, let's just say you're a disgusting pig who obviously was never taught any manners. It's not too late. Show some class next time you ride the train.

Grossed out!

To Pepper the Bunny:

Bunnies are often thought of as less affectionate than cats or dogs because their personalities are a little less apparent. I lost my beloved furry friend, Pepper, this week, and it makes me sad to know that I missed being there for his last minutes because I live in the city, and he preferred my parent's laundry room. RIP Pepper, you'll be missed.

COAL IN ONE

For a long time, Japanese food in Boston meant sushi or, at its most exotic, hibachi. Lately, the craze has been ramen. Owner Kazu Aotani and general manager Yuka Cumings hope to shift the attention from noodles to grilled meats with Yakitori Zai, opening soon in the space that was once Joe V's in the South End. "This food is so rooted in Japanese culture, and most people here have no idea what it is," says Cumings. "But it's a part of who we are."

The duo previously found success with their Snappy Sushi outposts on Newbury Street and in Davis Square, but Yakitori Zai is a departure on account of boasting a full-service kitchen. Featuring skewered and char-grilled offerings with basics like chicken or beef, plus traditional delicacies like chicken skin, hearts and neck, the menu is the creation of chef Sho Inoue, who moved to Boston after training under yakitori masters in Japan.

"THIS FOOD IS SO ROOTED IN JAPANESE CULTURE."

"It's the same as a good hamburger," says Aotani. "In Japan, you can get yakitori as fast-food, but really good yakitori requires the best ingredients, because the flavors and preparation are so simple." By working with local purveyors, importing charcoal from Japan and swapping table salt for French fleur de sel, they hope for an inspired translation of these shareable small plates.

Fans of Joe V's will recognize the general layout of Yakitori Zai—the simple and fuss-free style hasn't changed much. Which is exactly in keeping with Aotani's and Cumings' vision for their cuisine.

Q&A

KEEPING HOPE

Emmy-winning actress S. Epatha Merkerson screens her directorial debut, The Contradictions of Fair Hope, at the Museum of Fine Arts on June 17 as part of the Roxbury International Film Festival.

What drew you to this project?

It's really a story that hasn't been told, about this historical organization [the Fair Hope Benevolent Society] that was providing things like insurance when black people in this country couldn't get insurance. It's something that I knew very little about before we started, and it's an important story.

What surprised you about being in the director's seat?

With a documentary, you can't stay hard and fast on a story. As you start filming, someone says something that sparks something else, and you need to just see where it takes you.

How did Whoopi Goldberg become involved?

She volunteered, which was, like, unbelievable. I was hanging out with Whoopi and [codirector] Rockell Metcalf, and we were telling her about the film, and she asked if we had a narrator. It was similar to the way Christian McBride came to be involved with the music, and he brought some of the most amazing young musicians.

How do you measure the success of a film like this?

By the impact it makes. If people are moved by the subject and it sparks conversations, then that's success. We won best film at the International Pan-African Film Festival in Cannes, but no other "white" film festivals will accept the film. We've applied to maybe 70 film festivals and heard from about 35. Twenty-five of those are white festivals saying no, and 10 of them are black festivals who have embraced us. Now, we're looking toward organizations and colleges that will use the film as an educational tool. It seems crazy to me to continue trying to get into festivals that clearly have no interest in my history.

Drink of the Moment

TIKIPEDIA

NAME: The Totem Tiki. PRICE: $10.

INGREDIENTS: Sailor Jerry Rum, Mathilde peach liqueur, fresh lemon and lime juice, blue Curaçao.

INVENTOR: Bar manager Mike Batliner.

BALD PROMOTION FOR: Cirque du Soleil's Totem, opening on June 10.

WHY IT'S SEA GREEN: "The theme of the show is the metamorphosis of man," says Batliner. "So the blue-green kind of reminds you of the ocean, where we came from. And of summer."

ALLERGIC TO NEON? The drink's available in an opaque tiki glass.

FLAVOR: "When you see something this color, you think it'll taste like a snow cone," says Batliner. It doesn't. The Sailor Jerry adds notes of vanilla and spice (not to mention a stronger kick than most rums), while the peach smoothes out the sweetness. It's a subdued interpretation of a fluorescent genre.

FOR TIKI HATERS: Order the Quinoa Smash instead, using organic, gluten-free Fair Trade vodka, Chartreuse, mint and muddled grapefruit. Or the bar's big seller, the Fair Play, which reinterprets the Toronto with a twist of coffee. "I'm more a classic drink guy, myself," admits Batliner.

PHILOSOPHY: Batliner's passion for invention doesn't lead him down wild, inaccessible alleys. He tries to create drinks that are "adaptable to the everyday cocktail mixer. We pick ingredients that people might have in their house." ANDREW RIMAS

If the clever name doesn't charm you, the doughnut muffins will. At Glutenus Minimus, Natalie McEachern's celiac-friendly Belmont bakeshop, the wheat-free muffins, quick breads, cakes and customer-favorite pizza dough bake up tall and tender, thanks to her proprietary flour mix—rice flours plus potato and tapioca starches with a touch of xanthan gum to gel the batter together. COOKS & BOOKS

Finding the recipe for success

AFTER OPENING multiple restaurants and launching the annual Boston Wine Festival, Daniel Bruce is trying his hand at something new: writing a cookbook. The Boston Harbor Hotel chef says people have been asking him to write a book for years, and now, finally, the time is right. Bruce is working with former Boston Herald critic Mat Schaffer on Daniel Bruce: Out of the Woods (that's the working title, anyway), which will draw on his upbringing in rural Maine, his passion for foraging and the style of cooking he does at home. Expect it on shelves by this time next year.

BOOK 'EM
Chef Daniel Bruce

ALSO WORKING ON A COOKBOOK (his second) is Dave Becker, chef/owner of Sweet Basil in Needham. The focus is on soups, stews and braises, so while there's no official title, Becker says it could be dubbed "Braise Your Standards." Besides cooking and writing, Becker also crafts pottery to use as Sweet Basil dinnerware. Perhaps he inherited his artistic sensibility from his grandfather, printmaker Fred Becker, whose works hang in the Museum of Modern Art, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and in his grandson's restaurant.

SOMETIMES HAPPINESS takes a little fine-tuning. Less than two months after opening Happy's Bar + Kitchen, Michael Schlow's most recent project, chef Lynette Mosher is gone, and Joshua Smith has been named the new executive chef. Smith was the opening chef at Tico.

MESSAGE IN A BOTTLE

A young Kerouac got his feet wet with a maritime novel.

BEFORE HE WAS On the Road, Jack Kerouac was on the sea in the Merchant Marine. His first book, written before his mythic Beat odyssey, has two characters, Bill and Wesley, who represent Kerouac's own divided nature. Bill is a dreamy intellectual teaching at Columbia, restless but happy to be dealing in beautiful abstractions. Wesley is a knockabout, reckless and macho-moody, leaving his wife behind for life on the ocean.

Although written during the 1940s when fascism was the threat and communism was, for some, an idealistic goal, the characters argue politics, lefty against more lefty, with all the fervor of 1960s believers. Bill tosses the purely intellectual life of the mind overboard in favor of the risky excitement of shipboard life.

The Sea Is My Brother
by Jack Kerouac

Kerouac, a Lowell native, wrote this novel in 1943. It was published last year.

With lots of boisterous drinking, noisy fellowship and a hint of homoeroticism, these two men and their compatriots sign on for a dangerous wartime mission to Greenland. Kerouac's descriptions of the sea are full of rapture and longing, as if the water's energy and mist were echoing the strivings of his two protagonists. Although he was only 21 when he wrote the book, the later, famous, Kerouac shines through. ×××

FROM PAGE 206: "This was it! That air, that water, the ship's gentle plunges, the way a universe of pure wind drove off the Westminster's smoke and absorbed it, the way white-capped waves flashed green, blue and pink in the primordial dawn light, the way this Protean ocean extended its cleansing forces up, down, and in a terrific cyclorama to all directions."

Exploring Portsmouth, the crown of the New Hampshire coast

BANKE ON IT History buffs should schedule a visit to the Strawbery Banke Museum.

IT'S NOT SOMETHING THEY choose to crow about, the modest folk of the Granite State, where the most revered citizen used to be silent and made of stone. Yet interrupting the long stretch of Maine and Massachusetts coastline sits New Hampshire's 18-mile dash of waterfront. Visitors to the scenic city of Portsmouth will find that while unassuming, the area is packed with surprises, like a stoic New Englander with a latent talent for tap.

Tourists trekking up to this magical land of no sales tax and an actual happy hour can bunk down at Wentworth by the Sea, a sprawling estate located a bridge-length away from downtown Portsmouth on the island of New Castle. The hotel is famed for hosting Theodore Roosevelt and the other delegates of the Portsmouth Peace Treaty in 1905. Ninety-eight years later, the old gal wrapped up a $30 million face-lift, and now the manicured lawns host jaunty weddings, and an 8,500-square-foot spa provides sea salt exfoliations. If the goal of your vacation is just to soak in the ocean air, the hotel has a marina for docking your yacht, and guests can book tee times at Wentworth's private, Scottish links-style golf course situated on the edge of the Atlantic. In the evenings, Latitudes Waterfront offers dinner with a view, and at Roosevelt's Lounge, the bartenders will mix you a late-night cocktail while you strike up a conversation with the regulars who live down the road.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Wentworth by the Sea has both an indoor and an outdoor pool, complete with a bar for drinks and snacks.

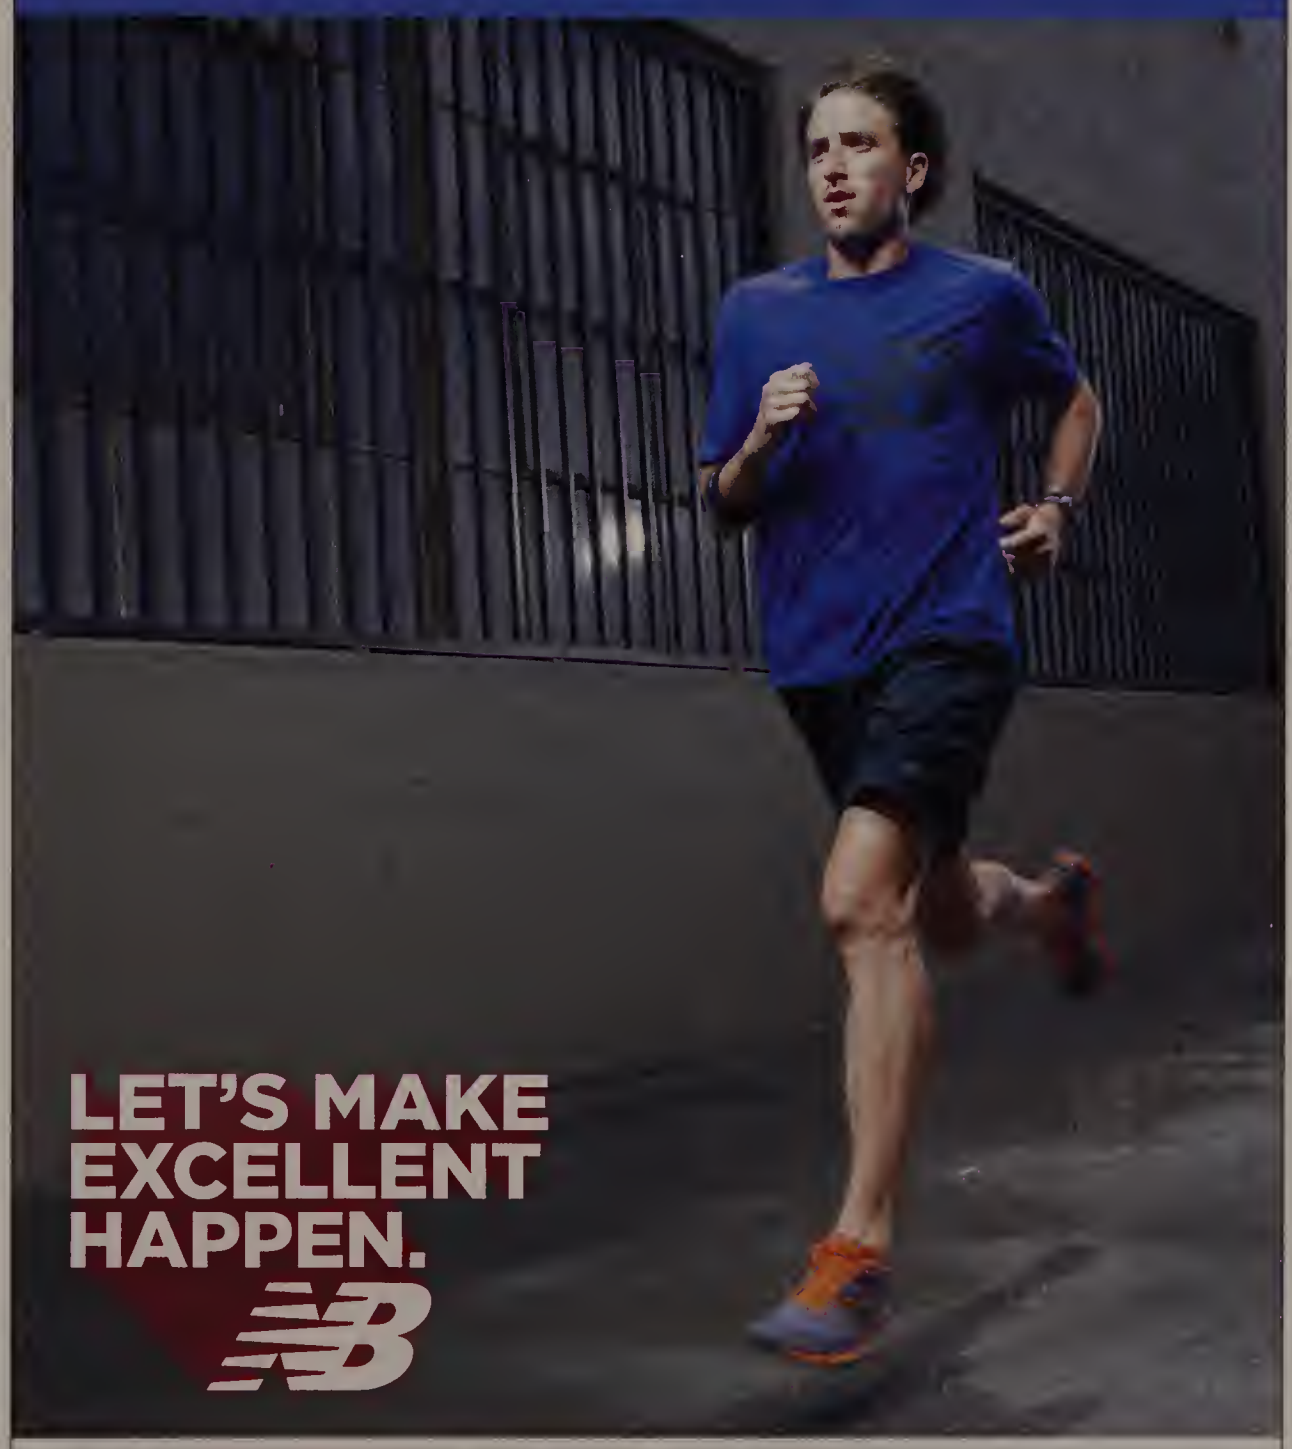
Jay McSharry is Portsmouth's main restaurateur. For local seafood, try Jumpin' Jay's Fish Café.

There's a party to join down in Market Square, and though Portsmouth is often cited as the American city with the most restaurants per capita, you might have to visit three or four places before you find an open barstool. Loosen up with a local Dirty Blonde ale at the Portsmouth Brewery, then hit the patio of the River House to watch the sun set over the Piscataqua. Should you get caught up in the revelry, you may find yourself wandering the brick sidewalks, listening to the live music floating out from the deck of the Portmouth Gas Light Co. and chatting up an amiable stranger, who'll ask, "You staying out of trouble? Well, this is the wrong town to do that." Maybe buy that stranger a hot dog at Gilley's PM Lunch, a 1940s-dining-cart-turned-diner that's open until 2:30 am.

LIGHT FARE Outdoor dining at Cava



Some call Portsmouth a mini Boston, and it's a city that embraces its history with equal fervor. During the day, visit the Strawbery Banke Museum, which examines one of the country's oldest settlements through role-players and restored houses. This summer's main exhibit traces the history of the area's style, and features a fashion show with Project Runway personalities on June 30. Next door, Prescott Park hosts plays and concerts all summer, including Ani DiFranco and Shawn Colvin later this month.

For dining, two restaurants in Commercial Alley offer different takes on tapas. Fresh off time spent staging at the famed Noma in Copenhagen, area native Matt Louis opened Moxy early last month. He's spotlighting Spanish cuisine through a local prism with dishes like hasty pudding "frites," Maine red hot dog bocadillos and Johnny cakes with brown-sugared pork shoulder. Across the way at Cava, chef Gregg Sessler spins traditional flavor combinations into new plates like cantaloupe with pork belly and chili threads. Opened in 2008 with childhood friend John Akar, Cava's menu also incorporates Lebanese elements, like a mezze platter, alongside standout Spanish classics like paella with house chorizo and exceptional churros for dessert.

Portsmouth is a city for sophisticated, innovative dining. But there's a small-town feel, evident as you dodge children on bicycles during your evening stroll. You'll pass new galleries and boutiques, but you'll find a cat dozing on the sill of Sheafe Street Books, while typewriters stand stacked in the window of the 100-year-old Hoyt's Office Products. There's a cozy blend of old and new New Hampshire, a combination worth bragging about. Not that the natives ever would. ×××

DONKEY KONG

The crowds are flocking to Davis Square's latest hot spot.

219 Elm St., Somerville

SKINTEREST Pork chicharrón mixed with pork belly for a sweet and spicy appetizer.

SOMERVILLE TOOK A DINING hit last year when Gargoyles on the Square closed, and chef Jason Santos decamped for downtown Boston. But the cuisine scene in Davis Square is flourishing, with recently opened places like Foundry on Elm and Posto remaining consistently crowded. In March, Posto chef/owner Joseph Cassinelli reanimated the old Gargoyles' space with his new venture, the Painted Burro. This upscale Mexican eatery offers creative combinations and compelling evidence that the residents of Davis have much to be thankful for in their range of dinner choices.

Inside the Painted Burro, the restaurant's goal to tweak authenticity is as vivid as the Día del Muerto decor on the walls. The wieldy menu of a couple dozen items ranges from bar snacks like olives "borrachos" ($5) steeped in spices and mezcal, to an assortment of tacos and entrées, like a pork chop ($21) with guava and roasted plum mole.

I loved the redundantly named pork chicharrón ($6), or pork rinds, their crispiness alternating with succulent morsels of pork belly, all the salty, savory protein coated with a tamarind glaze and enlivened with serrano chili. Romaine salad ($10) presented bite-sized cuts of crisp lettuce dressed with a diversity of tastes and textures provided by avocado, anchovies, aged cheese, spicy pumpkin seeds and a tomatillo-agave vinaigrette of subdued sweetness. Guacamole came in three variations, my favorite studded with pork belly and roasted grape tomatoes ($13). The smoky pork was tempered by the tomatoes' acidity, with both flavors coated in the creamy richness of the avocado.

Make sure to order the chile relleno ($16). Stuffed with apricots and peaches, corn mote (kernels cooked in a husk), Mexican cheeses and crunchy, toasted walnut mole, the dish was a perfect blend of a standard preparation and Cassinelli's spin on tradition.

Of the seven varieties of tacos, we began with a pair filled with chorizo de la casa ($12). Boasting spicy pork sausage and fried potatoes moistened with chipotle mayonnaise, the ensemble was topped with a sunny-side-up egg, which made the twosome a small supper by themselves. Crispy Maine redfish tacos with cabbage and jalapeño slaw ($14) disappointed in comparison, the fish filling so sparse as to almost escape notice.

While inconsistent, the main courses achieved high marks. Grilled mahi mahi ($23) yielded a tasty filet, though the Veracruz tomato sauce, while aiming for spicy, fell short as mild. A dense, bland bean tamale accompanied the grilled pork chop, which, in pleasant contrast, was succulent and full of flavor, with a first-rate side of chard and the sweet but not cloying guava-plum mole. The half "street cart" roast chicken ($19) featured moist, rich, dark meat. While the breast was a little dry, the entire bird benefited from a soak in an achiote-citrus marinade. Fried plantains provided a starch note, and braised kale contributed earthy, mildly bitter flavors.

Enchilada

The best entree was the enchilada "del paraiso" ($18), counterintuitively the cheapest offering. Filled with fresh zucchini, sweet charred onion, velvety maitake mushrooms and creamy, piquant goat cheese, the dish exemplified Cassinelli's skill for mixing tastes and textures.

As one might expect, the Painted Burro offers an array of powerful, fruity cocktails, though diners without a taste for tequila may find themselves in a fix. There are seven beers on draft, but those wanting Mexican cerveza must stick mostly with bottles (La Migra Imperial Stout, $13 for 22 oz.) and cans (Obscura Brown Ale, $6). A glass of decent Sensual malbec from Argentina ($8) suffered from a short pour, while a bottle of L.A. Cetto ($24), an off-dry Mexican chenin blanc, is worthy of taking a chance.

Even so, look around and you'll see a lot of margaritas ($8-$12) on the bar or passing through the air as a server brings another round to your boisterous neighbors at the next table. It seems upscale Mexican has evolved past trend to become a winning formula, and the Painted Burro is packing them in with style. ×××

ASK CHERYL

Q: NOW THAT THE WEATHER IS TURNING WARMER AND MORE HUMID MY PORES SEEM TO BE LARGER AND MORE NOTICEABLE. WHAT CAN I DO TO SHRINK THE SIZE OF MY PORES?

A: Yes, humidity certainly can bring changes to our skin. The size of our pores can actually not be physically changed, but you can change the appearance of your pores so they are not visible.

Pores look most pronounced in the oiliest part of our face, the T-zone: forehead, nose and chin. With warm weather and humidity your skin produces more oil and perspiration and your pores may become clogged, thus becoming more prominent. The best solution is to make sure your skin is kept thoroughly cleansed and exfoliated.

This can be accomplished by having a good cleansing facial, a light chemical peel or microdermabrasion. Home care is also important and your skin care professional can help you select a cleanser matched to your specific skin type, as well as the proper exfoliant, such as glycolic acid to use on a daily basis. Topical peptide products can also be very effective at reducing the appearance of pores.

Movies { SEAN BURNS }

THE TIME OF NIC

Nicolas Cage: Greatest American Actor
Starring Nicolas Cage. Runs June 11–21 at the Brattle Theatre. For a full schedule, visit brattlefilm.org.

"THERE ARE OFTEN LISTS of the great living male movie stars. How often do you see the name of Nicolas Cage? He should always be up there. He's daring and fearless in his choice of roles, and unafraid to crawl out on a limb, saw it off and remain suspended in air."
—Roger Ebert

"Nic Cage is no longer an actor."
—Sean Penn

The truth about Cage probably lies somewhere in between. Lately, he's been turning up in three or four films a year, and they're often shoddy paycheck gigs we can only presume were taken to stave off some well-publicized and hilarious financial problems. (Owning multiple castles, years of back taxes, that pet shark and dinosaur skull.) You can lose an entire evening chasing crazy Cage headlines down the Internet rabbit hole.

There's not a lot of quality control in the Cage filmography. But really, how could there be? He's probably shot two direct-to-video movies in Bulgaria during the time it took me to write this article.

Yet what you'll find in Cage's work is what's missing from the work of most modern actors, and that may be what draws the ire of dullards like former costar Penn. It's that spark of anything-can-happen unpredictability; those bug-eyed, sideways line readings that seem to have landed here from another planet. I've watched almost all of Cage's 60-something pictures and can tell you that I never know what I'm going to see next. When Nic gets into his wackadoo groove, there's nothing else quite like him in cinema.

I interviewed Cage once on a junket for Oliver Stone's World Trade Center, and a brief roundtable with this wiry man in a plaid blazer, sporting shock-orange fake hair and engaging in unrelenting eye contact left me convinced I'd just had an audience with an alien being. He doesn't operate on our wavelength, and I've come around to thinking we moviegoers are all the luckier for it.

It's an opinion shared by Ned Hinkle, creative director at the Brattle Theatre, who's running a repertory series this month called: Nicolas Cage: Greatest American Actor. Surveying some of the ecstatic highs and awful lows of this singular career, Hinkle wants to make a showcase for Cage at his most boffo bizarre.

"He's a magnet for the crazy, the weird and the wonderful of cinema," Hinkle muses. "And while it's admittedly facetious to subtitle the series Greatest American Actor, I mean it when I say that Cage's range is something to behold, and his ability to leave it all on the screen is just amazing."

Carefully curated in chronological order, the series kicks off with Martha Coolidge's 1983 Valley Girl and the Coen Brothers' triumphant Raising Arizona, offering a double whammy of the actor's leonine, cartoon physicality at a time when he was primarily known as Francis Ford Coppola's oddball nephew. I daresay there are few things more sublime in the Coens' fabled oeuvre than Cage's breathy, incongruously tranquil voice-over: "Maybe it was Utah."

A stand-alone evening is granted to Vampire's Kiss, perhaps the Rosetta stone of gonzo performances. Starring as a bizarrely-accented, buttoned-down executive who thinks he's become a vampire, Cage hems and hollers in a feast of scenery-chewing that was widely despised upon its 1988 release but has become a cult classic. He also eats a live cockroach.

Wild at Heart is still my favorite, with Cage channeling Elvis Presley in a lewd sprawl through a scorched America of curdled iconography, the way only David Lynch at the peak of his powers could imagine. The actor's courtly Presley-isms (he did end up marrying the King's daughter for about 15 minutes way back when) are just one example of the way he idiosyncratically slips into another performer's skin.

Next arrives Face/Off, John Woo's over-the-top extravaganza in which Cage swaps visages with John Travolta, effortlessly mimicking the disco king's halting mannerisms, but only after establishing a gold-pistol standard for debauched villainy. It's still a kick to watch these two try on each other's outsized screen personas.

The series culminates with a double feature of Cage's most acclaimed and derided turns of recent years. Bad Lieutenant: Port of Call New Orleans teams him with freaky soul mate Werner Herzog on a journey into half-kidding depravity, while The Wicker Man finds the actor almost super-heroically sputtering and railing against the constraints of a movie that doesn't quite know what to do with all this Nicolas Cage.

"The chances he takes are just phenomenal," Hinkle concludes. "And no, sometimes they don't work out. Hello, Wicker Man! It's easy to say that Cage's best days are behind him and that he's his own punch line now, but look at Bad Lieutenant. That movie is brilliant, and his performance is what makes it. He's goofy but scary, unhinged but in control, and not afraid to look ugly." ×××

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

MAN OF THE WORLD

Alejandro Escovedo bolsters his legacy with a little help from big-name friends.

Alejandro Escovedo plays at Brighton Music Hall on June 16.

ALEJANDRO ESCOVEDO isn't a household name, but he's revered in music circles. His high-profile friends include Bruce Springsteen, who recently jammed with the Texas troubadour at the Austin Music Awards during South by Southwest. And for his last show at SXSW, the Austin resident was joined by such guests as Patti Smith guitarist Lenny Kaye and members of R.E.M.

"People used to ask me, 'Why aren't you more famous?'" Escovedo says. "Some even go to the extent of asking me 'Why aren't you more successful?' I see that as just missing the whole point, because I'm very successful.... I've been doing this for 35 years, and even though I'm not a rich man, I'm very wealthy in that I have friends all over the world, and people listen to my music."

Escovedo credits that network for supporting him during a near-fatal bout with hepatitis C a decade ago. Artists from Ian Hunter to Lucinda Williams covered Escovedo's songs on a benefit album to help pay his bills. Now he's back to playing about 250 shows a year, including a June 16 date at the Brighton Music Hall with his rock outfit the Sensitive Boys.

> "Even though I'm not a rich man, I'm very wealthy."

"It took me a while to get my confidence back," Escovedo, 61, says from an Iowa tour stop. "When you're hit that hard with something, there's a sense of fear about getting back up and out on your feet. I stopped drinking, and I started taking care of myself, but in my head, it still took a couple more years."

He's made up for lost time. Starting with 2008's Real Animal, Escovedo has recorded three bracing albums with co-songwriter Chuck Prophet and producer Tony Visconti (best known for his work with David Bowie). His latest is the new Big Station.

Crisp rockers, like opening track "Man of the World," brim with confidence, though Big Station also spans moody ballads and catchy snatches of soul. "I've always loved to keep people moving at my shows," the singer/guitarist says. "It's very important that we create songs that were very rhythmic."

Some of his past albums have been more personally introspective, echoing both his health scare and the suicide of his ex-wife. However, for Big Station, Escovedo says, "We wanted to write from the perspective of someone looking out at the world."

One prime example is "Sally Was a Cop," about drug cartels' impact on the atmosphere in Mexico. "There's a lot of fear and a huge presence of military types," says Escovedo, who travels to Baja with Prophet to surf and write. "It was very different than I remember Mexico being when I used to go down there as a kid."

Escovedo grew up in Southern California as one of 12 children in a Mexican-American family. Eight became professional musicians, including his older brothers Coke and Pete, who both played in Santana. Percussionist Sheila E is one of Escovedo's nieces.

His father played in mariachi bands and loved Mexican trio music, inspiring Escovedo to include "Sabor a Mi" on Big Station as his first Spanish-language song. His mother enjoyed big-band jazz, and when he was a young boy in San Antonio, Escovedo was introduced to the rock 'n' roll of Chuck Berry and the Big Bopper by an older cousin who lived with his family.

"Whenever people ask me what my music's like, I say it's really the result of an expansive record collection," says Escovedo, whose tastes range from North African rockers Tinariwen to LCD Soundsystem. "I had a pretty vast knowledge of different styles because of all the music that was played around our home."

In his own career, Escovedo has run the gamut. As a member of the seminal San Francisco punk band the Nuns, he opened the Sex Pistols' final show. He pioneered roots rock and alt-country with Rank and File and True Believers. And in the past decade, he has toured with a string quintet as well as rock musicians.

Behind it all is the work ethic instilled by his father. "It was about having the quiet kind of confidence," Escovedo says. "He told me that if you work consistently and hard at something, and you get better, people will eventually notice. And it's better to be more involved with the act of creating than the rewards." ×××

Red Sox tickets are easy to come by. Enjoy it while it lasts.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

WHETHER WE'RE talking about Dutch tulips, Miami condos or tech stocks, financial bubbles are a part of life. And with every bubble, the bursting point arrives when the people ask, "Are you kidding me with that price?" For the Red Sox, that happened a few years ago when a scalper let me walk—one inning into the game—rather than sell a pair of bleacher tickets for less than $100 each. This was for a game against the Texas Rangers. Granted, I think it's fun when the Red Sox play teams from foreign countries, but not enough fun to shell out $100 to sit somewhere out over I-90.

Fast-forward to May 2012. My brother-in-law texts me a photo of his son at Fenway. He's surrounded by a sea of empty seats. "Looks like another sellout," I reply. He says everyone must be stuck in traffic. Note to the person in charge of certifying Red Sox sellouts: Use that excuse.

A few days later, I'm at a game against the Mariners. A friend scored a few tickets the old-fashioned way—for free from someone who couldn't make it. For one of our fellow attendees, this was his third Fenway visit in the past week, with all the tickets acquired gratis from their apathetic owners. That's the kind of thing that didn't happen a few years ago, when even the grimmest grandstand seats could be peddled to the ravenous horde for a profit.

Those days are over. I just took a look at Craigslist and found primo field box seats for $100—$25 under face value. Tulips and tech stocks, meet your latest compatriot: Red Sox tickets. Hey, what's that over there? A law school degree?

In retrospect, it's wise that the Red Sox didn't pursue the oft-discussed plan to build a larger stadium, a proposal that I fully supported. In fact, during the Dan Duquette era I wrote a column about how Fenway was a tiny dump that should be demolished and reconstructed on the waterfront with modern amenities, such as bathrooms that don't smell like they're plumbed directly to the Ganges River. Nobody ever read that column, because it never made it to print. Here's some advice for fledgling journalists: If your boss's office decor includes a photo of him holding a "Save Fenway" banner, you might not want to invest a lot of time writing a column entitled "Kill Fenway."

Full house?

The Kenmore Square scalpers will return to work full-time as carnies.

While I still believe that a waterfront park would've been fantastic, I've come to appreciate our funky little baseball temple. There's something to be said for walking into a place and declaring, "There's where I saw Billy Hatcher get thrown out trying to steal second when I was 13 years old." Or, "There's where I saw Mike Greenwell grow a mustache during the third inning against the Kansas City Royals in 1991." Or, "That's the green pole that I stared at for three hours because my dad was overly optimistic about the definition of 'obstructed view.'"

The Henry-era renovations successfully modernized the place, yet Fenway's modest capacity was always the kink in the hose. Sellouts are nice, but not when casual fans are forced to pay five times face value to a leathery hepatitis-carrier in a Members Only jacket in the HoJos parking lot. Now that tickets are cheap, I presume the Kenmore Square scalpers will either return to work full-time as carnies or finally submit to the tireless pursuit of Dog the Bounty Hunter.

Eventually the Sox will be good again, possibly within this very season. So go see a game now, while it's still unfashionable. Score an unwanted ticket and go cheer for 2012 Red Sox stars like Scott Podsednik, Che-Hsuan Lin and, um, that other dude they just signed off waivers. You know, the one who gets around the outfield pretty good for a guy in a neck brace.

Because before you know it, the Sox will get healthy and make a run at the postseason, flooding Fenway with corporate outings and people who think Bobby Valentine is an obscure 1980s professional wrestler. The cut-rate seats will disappear from Craigslist, and the likes of me will be back on the roof of the Baseball Tavern, doing whiskey shots to sterilize any scalper breath I may have inadvertently inhaled on the T.

But booms and busts are cyclic. So who knows—maybe by the time my own kids old enough, the Sox will be in last place again. One can hope, right? And then I can carry on the grand tradition of generations past, saying, "Son, that's a famous baseball player right there in front of you. Just behind that pole." ×××

ON NAVA, BRADY, OZZIE AND THE ROCKET

3 RANDOM THOUGHTS

The Never-ending Trial It's been almost five years since the Mitchell Report was released, and nearly two years since his indictment, but Roger "The Original Fat Head" Clemens is still wasting time, effort and absurd amounts of money trying to protect his non-existent innocence. Hilarious stuff, Roger. Keep it coming.

Hard Knock Life With one playoff appearance in the last decade, the once-proud Miami Dolphins are a joke. So, it's only natural that they've signed on for the new season of HBO's Hard Knocks! After all, what better way to initiate your first-time head coach and rookie QB, and all but guarantee that Kim Kardashian skanks her way back into your running back's life?

Anymore Manny? We knew it was a long shot that Manny Ramirez would make it back to the bigs, and now his comeback with Oakland has hit a predictable snag. From what they say, Manny (who turned 40 last month) simply looks old, slow and a shadow of his former crazy self. If they're desperate, maybe the A's should let him slug the traveling secretary?

1 ONE SHINING MOMENT

Who knows where the Celtics will be by the time you read this: At home? In Miami? On the golf course? In the Finals?! But here's one thing I know for sure: We'll never forget Rajon Rondo's Game 2 performance—53 minutes, 44 points, 10 assists, eight rebounds and one clear reminder that the future's in good hands.

5 SOX STORY LINES

RUNS FOR THEIR LIVES The Sox O is keeping them afloat.

Even Stevens At the moment, the Sox have finally climbed over .500, and in some ways it feels a little pathetic to commemorate such an average achievement. But isn't it time we throw these guys a bone? They're missing their closer and their entire outfield. They're working around a rabid media horde and incompetent owners. Their manager barely knows their names! .500? I'm actually surprised Lucky Lucchino hasn't thrown a pep rally.

More Amazement The Sox have somehow scored the second-most runs in the American League. This without Ellsbury and Crawford; with Adrian Gonzalez producing fewer homers and RBI than Mike Aviles; with 34-year-old Marlon Byrd and 36-year-old Scott Podsednik prominently featured in the lineup. It's unbelievable, and can only mean one thing: If the pitchers get their act together, we just might have ourselves a team.

Nava Say Nava Back in 2010, Daniel Nava smacked a grand salami on the first pitch of his career. A year later, he was waived by the Sox and couldn't land a job in the majors. This season, it took injuries to almost every outfielder in the organization, but Nava got another chance—and the former one-hit wonder's making it count. If only Erin Andrews could see him now. (Oh, wait. She can. Holla at your boy, Erin!)

DL for Dustin At press, the Sox are still deciding how to handle Dustin Pedroia's bum thumb, but here's hoping a trip to the DL is in the cards. An injured Pedroia is like a post-op canine. Even if it hurts to see him wearing that cone, you've got to protect him from himself. Seriously, the Sox should lock Dusty Two Sacks in a cage and have Matt Albers swallow the key. It's the only way Pedey will ever get healthy.

Beckett Back? It's been about a month since Josh Beckett was unceremoniously booed off the mound at Fenway. Since then? Three starts, three dominating performances, and suddenly his pig-headed brand of attitude and entitlement is tolerable. Funny how that works, Josh. Play like a superstar, and you can be as big of an ahole as you want. Just ask Manny.

2 NEW BRADY SKITS (INSPIRED BY FUNNY OR DIE)

BRADY WALKS INTO VICTORIA'S SECRET... Saleswoman: Hello, sir. Can I help you?... Brady: Yes, hi. I'm just here buying a present for my wife... Wait a second, are you Tom Brady?... (embarrassed) Yes, yes. And my wife is... Come on. I know who your wife is!... Right, so—... Who doesn't know Bridget Moynahan!?... What? No! I'm married to —... Oh, Tom. No need to be modest.

BRADY WALKS INTO THE MAYOR'S OFFICE... Mayor Menino: Tim! How are you?!... Brady: Um... Much traffic coming over from Fenway today?... Uh... Saw that loss to the Heat the other night. I tell you, you guys really gave your all... Er... Yeah, I'm just real sorry you couldn't bring the Stanley Cup back to Boston... [Passes out from confusion.]

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/9: I'll Have Another goes for the Triple Crown at Belmont. Will he do it? I don't know, but a retirement spent studding with an endless array of female horses would be more than enough motivation for me.

6/14: At the U.S. Open, Tiger Woods takes a shot at his first Major in four years. A shot that will likely hook into the woods, never to be seen again.

6/15: The Sox head over to Wrigley for a visit with Theo Epstein's Cubs. Can they leave Carl Crawford, Bobby Jenks and John Lackey in a bag by the parking lot dumpster?

6/19: The Sox host Ozzie Guillen and the Marlins. Come for the baseball, stay for the barely coherent political incorrectness.

"As a journalist,
I'm an instant
skeptic."

Soroff On MELISSA FRANCIS

The news anchor talks childhood stardom, being type A and the truth about those 30 Rock rumors.

FOX BUSINESS NETWORK ANCHOR, MELISSA FRANCIS, 39, was a child actor who made her first TV appearance when she was six months old. For two seasons, she appeared on Little House on the Prairie as Cassandra Cooper Ingalls, while also filming more than 100 TV commercials. After attending Harvard, she worked as a business journalist at stations in Hartford, Conn., Manchester, N.H., Providence, R.I., and Portland, Maine, as well as on PBS's MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour. In 2003, she joined CNBC and was coanchor of Power Lunch and The Call. Widely rumored to be the basis for the character of Avery Jessup on 30 Rock, she joined Fox Business earlier this year and is the host of Money With Melissa Francis. She lives in New York with her husband and two children.

Jonathan Soroff: So what can we expect to see on your new show that we don't already see on business TV?

Melissa Francis: We want to speak to a broader audience, whether that's someone deciding whether to refinance their home, deciding how to send their kids to college, reminding them what this thing is that Congress is spending tax dollars on—anything that involves money and impacts just about anybody. Of course, we like things that are eye-catching and that expose the hypocrisy of either government or Wall Street.

Are you the only Little House on the Prairie actor who knows what a derivative is?

[Laughs.] Instead of Dancing With the Stars, we could all sit down and do second derivatives together. Jason Bateman was always really smart. He might.

Would you consider yourself type A?

Yes. I'd like to figure out how to be a little less tightly wound, but so far, no luck.

Was your mother a stage mom?

Funny you should ask. I have a book coming out in November called Diary of a Stage Mother's Daughter. I don't think of it negatively. She spent a lot of time with her child on the set, and was very dedicated and devoted to her child's well-being.

Do you miss acting at all?

I don't. I stopped around the time I was a teenager, when you feel awkward about everything anyway. I didn't love saying other people's words or pretending to be someone else. I felt sort of silly about it. That's kind of the reason I got into news and why I love it so much. I have a teeny-tiny part in Sacha Baron Cohen's The Dictator, and the other day I was looping lines for it, and I realized I'm just not great at acting.

Similarities between acting and journalism?

The first job I ever got was from a news director for a small station in New Hampshire, and I think he was hoping I'd be a natural. Turns out, I was awful, because growing up on TV, you knew the lines by heart, you've blocked it, rehearsed it. And the news is almost exactly the opposite. The first time they put me on the air, I was like a deer in the headlights.

Worst story you ever got assigned?

In New England, the weather stories. I did a lot of standing on the side of the road in a snowstorm. Once, I went into a grocery store, and the woman in line next to me said, "I saw you on TV, standing on the side of the highway, and you just looked stupid."

Could you be a trader or a broker?

I was the first person to report live from the floor of the New York Mercantile Exchange, and it almost feels like you're surfing, because you can feel the wave of the trade. And you think, I can do this. I can make a lot of money. But if it was that easy, all those people would be filthy rich, and most of them aren't.

Are you the basis for Avery on 30 Rock*?*

[Laughs.] I would love to think that. Elizabeth Banks is gorgeous. I did know [producer] Rob Carlock in college, and, of course, everybody wants to do a cameo on that show. But he has a beautiful wife who's also a business journalist, and she could easily be the basis for that character.

Worst part of doing TV commercials?

I'm a picky eater. There was always the commercial where you had to eat something you really didn't like and then look thrilled about it. It was always something simple, like Campbell's Soup. I just don't like soup. The flip side is that one time I did a Frosted Flakes ad, and I love, love, love Frosted Flakes. I just kept eating them. I was like, "I don't want to spit it out!" I ate bowl after bowl, and they were sure I was going to throw up.

Thoughts on all this talk of class warfare?

It's a tough time economically in our country. I don't think it matters who you talk to or what end of the economic spectrum. People are concerned about their economic future and the economic future of our country. I think a lot of that agitation is coming to the fore. There's just a lot of discontent right now.

Where are we headed?

The recovery has been disappointingly slow, and I'm surprised we're not further along. The pile-on effects of things happening in Europe don't help.

Everyone's been gabbing about the capitalization of Apple being a trillion dollars. Is that driven by the media or is that realistic?

The media can't make people go out and buy iPads and iPods, and the company can't make 'em fast enough, so no. As a journalist, I'm an instant skeptic. I remember we all made fun of the iPad name, and look what happened.

You reported on porn…

Not porn. High-end call girls. You think that's not a big business?

Some reviews say you badger your guests.

If you're going to try and offer an answer that evades the question or doesn't make logical sense or tries to obfuscate or uses bad math, I'm going to call you on it. I hope I don't embarrass the person, but I won't let anyone get away with that.

Is Wall Street inherently sexy?

It is to me, because I've always been interested in it. When I was in college, someone told me, "You should become a business journalist, because most people think this is boring." To me, it's not. ×××

A VISUAL TRAWL THROUGH THE CITY'S TOP SEAFOOD DISHES

Turner looked at the ocean and saw the beauty and terror of the sublime. Melville used it as a metaphor for the mystery of the infinite. A lot of us, however, gaze into the immeasurable deep, the womb of all earthly life, the surface of nearly three-quarters of our blue planet, and see a buffet. One with an excellent raw bar.

It wasn't loaves and pork chops that got Jesus to perform a miracle. Addiction to seafood is one of the engines of history—you don't have much of a medieval economy without salted herring. In Copley's "Watson and the Shark," the roles should've been reversed, with a fleshy youth rearing up to take a bite from an innocent dorsal fin. So Joseph Conrad was full of it when, in The Mirror of the Sea, he wrote that the ocean "has never been friendly to man." The sea is a glutton's paramour. And Boston, perched as it is on the edge of Georges Bank, has historically been lucky in cod.

When we set out to pick the 10 most outstanding seafood dishes on the menu this summer, it immediately became apparent that a list of 20, or 40, would've been easier to compile. Whither the salt and pepper squid at Peach Farm? The ceviche at Rincón Limeño? The grigliata di pesce at Mare? The lobster pizza at UpStairs on the Square? To say nothing of the eternal controversy raised by chowder. (Thick or brothy? Pronounced salt pork, or leave it to the mollusks?)

Bostonians really are spoilt.

ROASTED BLUE COD WITH BUTTERBALL POTATOES, MUSSELS CHOWDER, BACON AND HERB NAGE ($27)

COD IS THE PARAGON OF MILD-FLAVORED FISH, AND CHEF WILLIAM KOVEL PLAYS ON ITS DELICACY BY MEANS OF A MUSSEL-STUDDED CHOWDER. "THE BROTH IS MADE WITH STOCK FROM THE BONES OF THE FISH, LIQUID FROM THE SHELLFISH AND A LITTLE BIT OF CREAM," HE SAYS. PAN ROASTED TO A GOLDEN BROWN, THE PEARLY FLESH REMAINS AS MOIST AS SASHIMI. UNDERNEATH, THE CHOWDER LENDS THE FISH A BUTTERY GROUNDING, WHILE THE MUSSELS ADD THEIR NATURAL TASTE OF MUSHROOM AND BRINE. OLIVE-OIL–SMASHED POTATOES AND BACON COMPLETE THE DISH, A REMINDER, SAYS KOVEL, OF HIS FAMILY HOME IN RHODE ISLAND.

B&G OYSTERS

FRIED IPSWICH CLAMS ($26)

MAGAZINES ARE ALWAYS WAXING LYRICAL ABOUT B&G'S LOBSTER ROLL, BUT OWNER BARBARA LYNCH'S PERSONAL FAVORITE FROM THE MENU'S NEW ENGLAND STAPLES IS THIS IDEALIZED VERSION OF THE SIMPLE CLAM BASKET. CHEF DE CUISINE STEPHEN OXAAL'S GENTLE HAND ON THE BREADING MEANS YOU'RE TASTING THE ANIMAL, NOT THE FRYOLATOR. "WE DREDGE OUR CLAMS IN A MIXTURE OF FLOUR AND A SMALL AMOUNT OF SEMOLINA, AND THEN FRY THEM FOR 30 SECONDS MAX," SAYS OXAAL. UTTERLY CLEAN OF GRIT, THE STRIPS ARE MEATY AND THICK, WHILE THE BELLIES HAVE THE SILKY TEXTURE OF FOIE. THEY SEEM SO ELEVATED, IT'S TEMPTING TO REFER TO THEM AS CLAM FRITES.

SPICY LOBSTER TACOS ($14)

"I MADE THIS ON A WHIM," SAYS CHEF JEREMY SEWALL. "I NEVER THOUGHT I'D KEEP IT ON THE MENU." A CROSS-CONTINENTAL DISH EVOKING BAJA CALIFORNIA BY WAY OF THE MAINE SEACOAST, THIS IS A STUDY IN SUMMER FLAVORS, COMBINING NOTES OF CILANTRO, LIME AND MANGO. NO SINGLE TASTE OVERPOWERS THE BUTTERY FOUNDATION OF CHILLED LOBSTER CHUNKS AND AVOCADO MOUSSE—A PAIRING THAT'S SO COMPLEMENTARY IT'S A SURPRISE IT'S NOT MORE COMMON. "IT HAS ALL THE THINGS THAT HELP LOBSTER BE GREAT: A LITTLE SPICE, ACID, CREAMY TEXTURE AND CRUNCH."

STEAMERS ($13)

ONE OF THE SIMPLEST SEAFOOD DISHES IN THE REPERTOIRE, THESE CLAMS FIND APOTHEOSIS IN BROTH. "WE START WITH SWEET CAPE ANN CLAMS THAT ARE HAND-DUG AND SIZED PERFECTLY," SAYS CHEF CHRIS COWEN. "THEN WE STEAM THEM WITH WHITE WINE, LEMON SLICES, FRESH THYME, SLICED GARLIC AND GROUND PEPPER." SIMMERED IN THIS UMAMI BATH, THEY DON'T EVEN NEED A DIP IN MELTED BUTTER TO GIVE THEM JUICE. YOU BITE INTO MEAT, NOT SAND—THERE'S NEVER A STRAY GRAIN—AND THE LIQUID DEMANDS SHAMELESS FINGER-LICKING. MAKE SURE TO ASK FOR AN EXTRA CUP OF BROTH FOR SPONGING BREAD.

MONKFISH SADDLE WITH HOUSE BACON, ROASTED ASPARAGUS AND MUSHROOM RAGOUT ($36)

WHILE SISTER RESTAURANT TRADE IS GETTING A LOT OF ATTENTION FOR ITS RIGHTLY LAUDED WHOLE GRILLED FISH OF THE DAY, CHEF JODY ADAMS PERFECTED HER SEAFOOD SKILLS IN HER FLAGSHIP KITCHEN. RIALTO'S STRIPED BASS WITH MINT AND SESAME IS THE UR-FISH TO TRADE'S, BUT IT'S THIS MEATIER INVENTION THAT HOLDS AN EDGE IN SAVOR. THE DENSE TEXTURE OF MONKFISH CAN CARRY A HEARTY SAUCE, AND THIS ONE IS BORN FROM A BLESSED MARRIAGE OF MUSHROOMS AND BACON. BRIGHTENED WITH A SNAP OF ASPARAGUS, THE FLAVORS ARE CLASSICALLY NORTHERN ITALIAN AND RICH, ALTHOUGH RICH IS A PALE WORD TO DESCRIBE A DISTILLATE OF FOREST, FARM AND SEA.

THE DECLINE OF

THE LAST BASTION OF BOSTON'S

OLD DINING SCENE

LOCKE OVER?

By Nancy Gaines

ON A BALMY SATURDAY NIGHT, the city bustling with Mother's Day and graduation crowds, two gentlemen, Tom, in his 30s, and George, of an older generation, are sitting at the Avery Bar in the Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common, talking food. Have you been here or there? And so forth.

WHAT ABOUT LOCKE-OBER, interjects a fellow barfly, naming the venerable spot two blocks away. "WE LOVE LOCKE'S," they say in tandem. "IS IT STILL OPEN?"

Tom and George, who reside in the Ritz condos and won't divulge surnames, capture Locke's dilemma: It's loved, but—as on this night, with an empty bar and sparsely occupied dining room—lonely.

Like Downton Abbey in a downtown alley, Locke-Ober Café, the most gorgeous restaurant in Boston, is struggling to determine whether it's a precious antique or an anachronism. It's in a bad location. The patrons are dying off. The restaurant has opened and closed at various points, and it has no special drawing card, like a star chef or bar scene, to attract new blood.

"But if there isn't a place in Boston for something so beautiful, with good food and service, something's wrong," says Lydia Shire, who served as executive chef there from 2001 to 2010. "Why do we all have to go to the next newest place?"

Locke's warren of rooms in a dead-end brick lane off Downtown Crossing were, for more than a century, the spot for Boston powerbrokers to eat, drink and cavort. The Ward Eight cocktail, an homage to city boss Martin Lomasney, was invented there in 1898. Locke was named to the National Register of Historic Places in 1986.

It's easy to go back in time amid Locke's magnificent mahogany carvings, art nouveau windows and gilt wallpaper. Add the bronze sculpture, "Gloria Victis," which became an irresistible hat rack for high-spirited lads; the portrait of naked Mademoiselle Yvonne draped in black when Harvard loses to Yale; the stash of speakeasy-era bottles found recently in a closet; the buzzers in the upstairs dining rooms to summon service.

Locke's is legend. This is where women were unwelcome in the main room until the 1970s, but ladies of another ilk sidled into the cozy private rooms on the third floor. "We even let the waiters have their share," says one who was there.

Dating from 1875, it's the gilded palace where Enrico Caruso, Theodore Roosevelt, Marilyn Monroe and Joe DiMaggio dined, where Saltonstalls and Henry Cabot Lodge felt at home. Where JFK and pals supped lobster stew on Saturday nights, and former Governor Bill Weld and Senate President Billy Bulger discoursed in Latin over scrod and schnitzel. Locke's is the third oldest restaurant operating continuously in the same spot in Boston (behind Union Oyster House, 1826, and Durgin-Park, 1827), but the eldest grand one. Other vintage dining destinations—Café Budapest, Maison Robert, Aujourd'hui—are gone.

Today, Locke's location is populated by cheap jewelers, panhandlers and street vendors. Aging loyalists stopped going when it ceased lunch service nearly four years ago. (It now opens for lunch during restaurant weeks and for the holiday season, further confusing the issue.) Forty-somethings seek out livelier bar scenes, more casual meals. A young generation has never heard of it.

"It's got great history, but you just don't think of it."

"I spent a lot of time there, going back 20 years or more," says John Crowley, a 50ish vice president in a downtown financial firm, "but I popped in recently, and it was dead in the water. I think the public perception is it's closed."

Jennifer Athas Mereu, a 40ish real estate broker with Campion and Company, says she used to love going to Locke's members-only club, Yvonne's, in the '90s. "Now? Even as someone living nearby, walking down that alley at night, no thanks." Ferguson Herivaux, who was a club promoter for Yvonne's, says, "It seems a challenge to revamp. It's pretty much a museum." But owner David Ray has faith. "Well, I've been there for 30 years," he says. "What's another two?"

Ray, who lives in Newport, R.I., where he owns the Bannister's Wharf restaurant complex, purchased Locke's in the late '70s. He leased it to Winter Place LLC, owned by Paul Licari and Shire, who brought in a group of local investors from 2001 to 2010. When negotiations for the lease renewal broke down—at the time Shire was busy with new ventures—Ray stepped back in, keeping Licari as managing director. They closed Locke-Ober for three months of renovations to reopen in April of last year.

Admitting business is "off and on," Ray says, "We're very bullish, if we can weather the next year or two." He said he hopes Millennium Partners' forthcoming luxe condos—plugging the "hole in the ground" abandoned by Filene's in 2008—with some smaller residential conversions nearby "will be very positive for Locke's."

Still, the disconnect between Locke's and contemporary Boston goes deeper than the shadows of Downtown Crossing, say once and former fans. They point to lax management that's failed to attract new clientele. "I've told Paul he has to market the place," says George, the elder patron at the Ritz (who cites the calves liver as his Locke-Ober favorite). The antique venue has an outdated website, and does no advertising or promotion.

Complaints are a mixed bag. Locke's management says the problem is the location, but nearby places like Petit Robert Central and Artisan Bistro are packed. They point to the economy, but high-end spots around town are thriving. Older patrons sniff at the "pretty young things" who can't mix a proper drink, while younger ones carp that dishes like lobster Savannah ($62) and Dover sole ($42)—while beautifully served—are too stodgy and old-fashioned. Regardless of its fine points and flaws, Locke's lack of marketing and disinterest from the public and management may well be the death knell.

"There's no buzz, no special food or bar crowd that makes it inviting," says a 39-year-old lawyer who lives and works nearby. "It's got great history, great decor, but you just don't think of it." Indeed, on what should be a bustling Saturday at 8 pm, there are about a dozen diners: a solitary family gathering, elderly couples and four 40ish women. The empty bar has 1950s Sinatra piped in. It's just plain dull.

Gone are the days of long, lubricated lunches and public hijinks. And it was one thing when a merchant prince could walk to Locke's from an office downtown; now many firms have closed, consolidated or moved to the Seaport District. (The Class A office vacancy rate in the Financial District hovers around 20 percent, compared to about seven for the Back Bay.)

Beyond that, "It's an institution that needs an updated identity and personality," says George Lewis Jr., a veteran nightspot and restaurant operator, who had a piece of Locke's in the '00s. "Lydia gave the institution new life, but that's been over for years. Locke's now is like Titanic. Everyone knows the ending."

It'd be costly, Lewis points out, to make renovations like installing an elevator, redoing the threadbare top floor and creating handicap access. With property value in the millions, the restaurant "is probably worth more as a teardown," says Charlie Perkins of the Boston Restaurant Group, which makes industry deals and spots trends. "It's not the dining scene that matters. It's all about the scene."

Says Shire, whose current hotspots are Scampo in the Liberty Hotel and Towne Stove and Spirits in the Back Bay, "I've been a fan of Locke-Ober all my life, and I will be to the end. It was hurt by its location. Wine and spirits distributors stopped hosting dinners there, and it wasn't because Lydia Shire makes shitty food," she says. "It was because they wouldn't traipse people through downtown."

"It's on life support," says Bob Cagnina, a retired Lehman Brothers executive who's been a Locke's regular since 1967 and misses its "sense of passion." Gone are the days when juiced financiers tossed plates out the window into the alley for amusement.

While some employees have been there 20 or more years, there's no particular personality or hospitality identified with the front or back of the house.

Some say a celeb chef might perk up the buzz (although Shire was hardly chopped liver). Current chef Kat McCart came over three months ago from Locke's sister restaurant, the Clark Cooke House in Newport. The mainstay right now, says Licari, is private functions and special occasions, while keeping "the core, the Men's Café. People come here for the brand, and we want to keep it going."

He adds, "We don't want to make moves until we're ready and can do it cohesively. We want to see what's happening in the neighborhood. Do we want to open later? Open Sundays? Open for lunch? Open up our square footage? Add brunch or a special bar menu?"

Perhaps. At least, says Licari, "We've still got a pulse." ➪

OLD FAITHFUL

With the disappearanee of most of the grand dining rooms in the eity, one restaurant, the 34-year-old L'Espalier, stands as a suecessful bridge from old opulence to modern chic. Maître d'hotel Louis Risoli has been there over 30 years, and serves as an exemplar of how to meld the formality of patrieian dining with an avuncular, easy spirit.

Over the years, Risoli has developed almost psychie powers to intuit and improve the dining experience for his guests, from diseerning if someone doesn't seem to be enjoying a dish—and discreetly proffering another—to making chitchat to lighten a mood.

As a working artist, Risoli helps preserve L'Espalier's ambianee. As one of a handful of nationally recognized eheese experts, he serves as the restaurant's fromager. And as maître d', he presides over a bevy of captains, three dining rooms and 130 seats—a very high ratio of service. Tall and eourtly in his suit and Versace tie, Risoli says the key to L'Espalier's longevity is that he, the staff and ehef/owner Frank McClelland are on the same page. "We have the same standards and keep our egos out of it."

L'Espalier predates even the formidable forbears of today's rarified foodie culture—Michela's, Seasons, Jasper's, Biba, Hamersley's and Rialto—and from the outset was a dining destination, the only independent restaurant in New England to receive 13 eonsecutive AAA/CAA Five Diamond Awards. But when it moved in 2008 from its landmark Baek Bay townhouse to the sleek Mandarin Oriental, Boston hotel nearby, "We all were terrified we'd lose our speeial appeal," admits Risoli.

Yet the lunch and dinner erowds never faltered. "We prize eontinuity and tradition," says Risoli, but "are not afraid to reinvent ourselves. The core stays the same, but we change around the edges." ❋

ENTER THE DRAGONS

IN CHINA, DRAGON BOAT festivals commemorate, in a splashy manner, the drowning of the ancient poet Qu Yuan. Held around the fifth day of the fifth moon of the year, their paddling and pandemonium are meant to drive away malevolent spirits. On June 9 and 10, the Charles River will be free of supernatural pollutants as teams of 18-person boats plunge into the dirty water. One of New England's largest Asian-American events, the festival also features dance, music and boating (with no experience required).

The Boston Dragon Boat Festival takes place June 8 starting at 8 am at the MIT Pierce Boathouse and June 10 at 9 am on the Charles River near Harvard. bostondragonboat.org.

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set-pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast, allowing them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Battleship ★ Ladies and gentlemen, this is the reductio ad absurdum of summer blockbusters, and not just because it's based on a board game. Consisting of spare parts from Independence Day, Top Gun, Transformers and Armageddon, it makes you wonder why Hollywood didn't try ripping off a good action film for a change. I don't even feel comfortable calling this a movie. Director Peter Berg, a gifted filmmaker responsible for Friday Night Lights on both the large and small screens, as well as nifty little B-pictures like The Rundown and The Kingdom, obviously set out to make the dumbest popcorn flick possible. Battleship is so far beyond pandering, it's impossible not to feel like you're in the presence of smart people who think you're an idiot. And where does the most flag-waving military recruitment film this side of a Michael Bay propaganda picture get the nerve to end with Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Fortunate Son"? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bel Ami ★ ½ This stuffy adaptation of Guy de Maupassant's novel relies on the extremely limited charms of Robert Pattinson, who stars here as a debauched war vet humping his way to the top of the social ladder in belle époque Paris. Typecast as an attractive young man without a single thought in his head, Pattinson beds down with a trifecta of faded starlets who would've made this movie a must-see in the '90s. First, he catches the eye of Uma Thurman's proto-feminist political crusader, until she pawns him off for strategic purposes on Christina Ricci's needy puppy dog. There's a brief interlude with Kristin Scott Thomas' desperate housewife, while all the men grumble about a war in the works. Directors Declan Donnellan and Nick Ormerod stuck strictly to the Merchant-Ivory playbook, steering disappointingly clear of the material's inherent camp. Bel Ami is bogged down with bland performances, a murky color palette and some extremely unflattering angles on actresses who used to be knockouts. Team Jacob. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Bernie ★★ Director Richard Linklater adapts the true story of a gay, small-town Texas funeral director (Jack Black) with a penchant for stepping out with elderly widows. Shirley MacLaine hams it up to addled effect as a mean old lady, and Linklater pads out this murder tale with testimonials from actual residents of Carthage, Texas. It's half-documentary, half-feature, meaning that every time Linklater and cowriter Skip Hollandsworth don't feel like writing a scene, they can fall back on eyewitnesses to do the work for them. Kudos to Matthew McConaughey for eschewing his usual shirtless vanity in order to play a self-promoting lawman in rimless glasses and a silly hat. The movie is neither fish nor fowl, rife with easy shortcuts and outsized performances. Black's appeal continues to elude me, but Bernie could've been either a chilling documentary or a terrific character study. As is, it's neither. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Cabin in the Woods ★★★ We've all seen this flick before, where a few teens shack up in a cottage for a booze- and hormone-fueled weekend that turns predictably horrific. But what you haven't seen is a nutzoid explanation for where these kinds of pictures come from, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer brain-trust Joss Whedon and Drew Goddard have concocted a snarky deconstruction involving angry gods and a couple of stiffs going through the motions in a high-tech scare factory. Character actors Richard Jenkins and Bradley Whitford spin gold out of Whedon's quips, engineering slasher-film tropes during just another day at the office. Younger members of the cast give game and, at times, quite purposefully awful performances, with Thor's Chris Hemsworth the standout for deliberate inelegance. The joke within a joke eventually escalates to giddy levels of carnage and insanity, yet you find yourself suffering from a weirdly hollow feeling when all is said and done. Clever only gets you so far. (In the suburbs.)

Damsels in Distress ★★★ ½ Writer/director Whit Stillman, sadly MIA since 1998's The Last Days of Disco, returns with his brand of uppity, articulate characters and their lack of self-awareness. Indie it-girl Greta Gerwig stars as Violet, the leader of the in-crowd at the fictional Seven Oaks College who's tirelessly devoted to improving the lives of her fellow students, whether or not they need her assistance. Running a suicide prevention center (the "prevention" part of the sign keeps amusingly falling off), Violet believes there's no psychological problem that can't be cured by free donuts, scented soaps and a vigorous regimen of tap dancing. Loopier and more cartoonish than Stillman's previous pictures, Damsels doesn't progress from scene to scene so much as it lurch-

The First Cut is the Deepest

Slash Into Me

Fond memories of bonfires and bug bites at Camp Whatchamacallit mark our preteen memories, and with the summer haze looming over us, it's hard not to feel nostalgic for those carefree days. The Coolidge Corner Theatre's @fter Midnite series offers reassurance that the trade of tan-lines for taxes was worth the passage of time when it screens the original Friday the 13th, June 8–9. The 1980 flick is a campy slasher classic and stars a 21-year-old Kevin Bacon, just in case you weren't feeling old enough already. Julia Grasso es through the school year, but the ramshackle effect is curiously enchanting. Stillman eyes even the dimmest of these kids with tremendous affection, until Violet's lifelong ambition to "start an international dance craze" becomes weirdly wistful and almost noble. A fine mess. (At Somerville Theatre.)

Dark Shadows ★★★ ½ I'm exhausted by the constant collaborations between Johnny Depp and Tim Burton, which too often find them putting a homogenized stamp of pale makeup and self-conscious quirk on preexisting properties like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory or (heaven help us) Alice in Wonderland. But in adapting this weirdo 1960s serial, these two have hit a sweet spot they've been consistently missing for almost 20 years. Genuinely odd, with a half-kidding tone, the film follows Depp's 16th-century vampire, cursed for all eternity by a spurned lover (the magnificent Eva Green) only to be unearthed in 1972. It's a visual feast, with sumptuous gothic production design occasionally offset by tacky DayGlo colors. Popping with invention and a prankish, kinky sense of humor, the movie's soap-opera plotting dovetails nicely with Burton's career-long inability to tell a coherent story. Luxuriating in bizarre set-pieces and bloody asides, Dark Shadows is an extremely strange film, but it feels personal and particular. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Darling Companion ★ Possibly the most inconsequential movie ever made, director Lawrence Kasdan (who wrote the script with his wife, Meg) expects us to spend two hours worrying about a couple of aholes who can't find their dog. Once upon a time, Kasdan wrote The Empire Strikes Back and Raiders of the Lost Ark, before The Big Chill's fluke success turned him into the tiresome poet laureate of baby boomers. Darling Companion finds Kevin Kline and Diane Keaton giving uncharacteristically grating performances as wealthy folks who can't find the pooch after their daughter's wedding at a vacation estate in the mountains. Cinematographer Michael McDonough should hide his head in shame, as the light sources constantly contradict each other and crucial shots remain stubbornly out of focus. This would be embarrassing work for a first-year film student. The fact that a director of Kasdan's stature signed off on such a project must signal his senility. This is a creaky picture in which nothing happens. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Dictator ★ ½ For starters, even the beard looks phony. Sacha Baron Cohen, the comic genius behind Borat and Da Ali G Show, forgoes his usual guerilla pranks for safe, scripted folly. The first narrative he's attempted since 2002's woebegone Ali G Indahouse, The Dictator stars Baron Cohen as General Admiral Aladeen, the despot of an oil-rich North African country named Wadiya. He's an ignorant, petulant child suffering from the egomania typical of a dictator. After a promising start, the stupid plot kicks in, with Aladeen ambushed on a trip to the United Nations and replaced with a double. Broke and adrift in lower Manhattan, he falls in love with a hippy-dippy vegan (Anna Faris) and suffers every tired fish-out-of-water scenario you'd expect from a Mike Myers movie. The thrill of Da Ali G Show or Borat was watching Baron Cohen insinuate his outrageous caricatures into deadly serious surroundings. The Dictator has no such nerve, existing in an alternate cartoon reality where his satire doesn't sting. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Five-Year Engagement ★★ Jason Segel and Emily Blunt get engaged before the opening credits, so there's no suspense here. What we end up watching is a dirge in which their wedding is constantly delayed in order to serve the title. Cowriter Segel and director Nicholas Stoller have been here before with the wonderful Forgetting Sarah Marshall, but they're better at doing breakups than postponements. When Blunt gets a teaching job in Ann Arbor, Segel ditches his gig as a hotshot San Francisco sous chef to follow her into the long Michigan winter. Resentment and fake snow abound. There's an interesting movie to be made about spouses giving up their careers to follow the other person's dreams, but this film lacks the guts for such exploration. Instead, we get cheap laughs, a fake beard and a nasty, misogynist undertow. Both leads are charming, but there isn't enough of a movie here to support them. (In the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games ★½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Boston Common, the Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Jiro Dreams of Sushi ★★★ Jiro's sushi restaurant has only 10 seats. If you can get reservations, which book a month in advance, expect to pay upward of $300 a meal for a dining experience that sometimes lasts a mere 15 minutes, while the proprietor gazes impatiently at you as he hands out slices of raw fish. And yet, Sukiyabashi Jiro has received three stars from the Michelin guide, and food critics such as Tokyo's Mashuhrio Yamamoto wax rhapsodic about Jiro Ono's sushi as if it were the second coming. David Gelb's strangely engrossing documentary is foodie-ism at its most monastic. Profiling prickly 85-year-old master chef Jiro Ono, it's mainly a film about the pursuit of perfection. The humorless and disciplined Ono keeps a samurai warrior's code in the kitchen, and it's fascinating to watch the precision of a master at work. Yet the movie flirts with sadness in the margins. As much as we admire the subject's skill and commitment to professionalism, is this really all there is to life? (At Coolidge Corner.)

Men In Black 3 ★ ½ A decade-late, this lumbering $215 million behemoth stumbles into theaters punch-drunk, top-heavy and sweating so hard it's all but barren of laughs. Accounting for the monumental indifference

What the Bel?

We'll Always Have Paris

Robert Pattinson sleeps his way through France in Declan Donnellan and Nick Ormerod's Bel Ami.

of Tommy Lee Jones, Will Smith reportedly came up with the idea for a time-travelling villain to murder Jones' Agent K back in 1969, sending Big Willie on a Terminator-style mission to a groovier era to save his partner (well-impersonated by Josh Brolin). Don't worry about all the alternate time-line paradoxes that would obviously ensue, because the multiple screenwriters didn't bother. There's a bit of lip service about how a man of Smith's complexion might have a tough time in that tumultuous era, a potentially interesting conceit from which the picture retreats. Men in Black 3 started shooting back in September of 2010 without a finished script, and now that all the reshoots, red herrings and character backgrounds have been patched together, it doesn't make a lick of sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

of a month prior to theatrical release. This is a thorny issue, but however one chooses to see Sarah Polley's heartfelt sophomore directorial effort, it's a film worth watching. Michelle Williams stars as a happy housewife settled into a routine with her hubby of five years, played with affable obliviousness by Seth Rogen. But everything ruptures once she meets their new neighbor (Luke Kirby), a shy artist who trots around in a rickshaw and secretly yearns for the married lady across the street. Keenly sensitive to the inconvenience of desire, Polley (who also wrote the screenplay) dances around their tentative courtship, with the couple increasingly weighed down by the knowledge that their happiness will only result in misery for others. A couple of misjudged surreal flourishes muck up the movie's lived-in rhythm, but is there a subtler, more emotionally transparent actress than Williams working today? Her silences speak volumes. (Now available via Video On Demand, coming to theaters in July.)

The Three Stooges ★ An act of artistic necrophilia on par with Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, brothers Peter and Bobby Farrelly's years-in-development "tribute" casts Sean Hayes, Chris Diamantopoulos and Will Sasso as passable imitations of Moe, Larry and Curly. Transplanted to modern times for no discernible reason, the lazy story line finds the stooges searching for $830,000 to save their endangered orphanage, allowing the Farrellys to ramp up the treacle while eliciting a rare, unfunny turn from Larry David as a nun named Sister Mary Mengele. Somewhere in the mix is Sofia Vergara as an adulterous wife plotting to have her husband whacked, with our trio of geniuses inadvertently confounding her plans at every turn. All the nyuk-nyuk's, eye-pokes and bonks on the head are faithfully rendered, albeit staged by the Farrellys with complete indifference to anything resembling comic timing or slapstick precision. Stick with the elegant idiocy of the original stooges, who never would've stooped to jokes about the Kardashians and Jersey Shore. (In the suburbs.)

Neat and Tidey

Making Waves At a glance, Eric Zener's works are photographs of water scenes. But a closer look reveals that they're crafted by a paintbrush rather than captured by a lens. His photo-like oil paintings conjure summer as his subjects dive through, wade in or contemplate oceans or pools. See Zener's works alongside those by his photorealistic contemporaries Marybeth Rothman and June Stratton at Lanoue Fine Art's Lights, Camera... Click: Photography in Contemporary Art through June. Brigid Wright

DISTINCT POSSIBILITIES

Diamonds Are a Boy's Best Friend

Just walking through the door, you knew they got it right at the Possibilities Gala to benefit Perkins School for the Blind.

Like at many parties, guests stopped for a photo. Unlike most parties, someone had thoughtfully left a box of Shiseido dabbing pads nearby.

Once inside the neo-gothic splendor of the Howe building, you could spot such gleaming examples of humanity as blonde bombshell Corinne Grousbeck and her NBA chief husband, Wyc, bejeweled beauty Evelyn Treacy and the super-suave Michael, Russian supermodel Katherine Chapman and Mr. Staples Tom Stemberg, interior design giant Michael Carter and his handsome husband, David Rousseau, Croatian stunner Paulina Neely and her hockey legend other half, Cam, the suspiciously tanned Robin and Marcia Brown, attorney hot-ginge Benjamin McGuire, unapologetic Hoya Michael Andelman and his beautiful bride, Claudia, blonde DILF Michael Forrester (whose wife, Courtney, the cupcake mogul, was busy giving a speech at Harvard), fashion avatars Alan and Be Bilzerian, and so on and so forth.

While the Howe Building's architecture is stunning, it's also functional, designed to help the blind navigate the corridors through echoes. Fortunately, if you know what you're doing, the same echoes can lead you to the bar, where we saw a man lean over to kiss a prominent socialite, who said, "No tongue, darling."

Meanwhile, one woman pointed out that she still had a child in high school, and then added, "No need to adopt the baby from Malawi just yet."

Following drinks, dinner took place in an enormous tent, where guests' eyes were opened to everything the school does until there wasn't a dry one in the house, while Rock and Roll Hall of Famer Felix Cavaliere topped the evening off.

The night's funniest remark: "I'm a gay man. I'm looking at your necklace, not your tits."

Who You Callin' a Hoedown?

Like the swallows coming back to San Juan Capistrano (only a helluva lot rowdier), the construction mogul McCourt family returns every spring to the Boston Harbor Hotel for the McCourt Foundation Gala.

David Rousseau, Evelyn Treacy and Michael Carter at the Perkins Possibilities Gala

Paulina and Cam Neely at the Perkins Possibilities Gala

Trevor McCourt and Tim Brett at the McCourt Foundation Gala

Charity and Ryan McCourt and Missie Prince at the McCourt Foundation Gala

Dora Lewin and Lynn Chang at the Amnesty International benefit

The evening, which raises money for research into Alzheimer's disease and multiple sclerosis, begins with pre-gaming in the ballroom, where the guests included the likes of Charity (aka "Patience") Chamillard McCourt and her husband, Ryan, his studly brothers, Trevor and Matt, the beautiful Christine Meara and her Hingham spucky of a husband, Billy, the newly engaged Timmy Brett, brunette babe Missie Prince, the stunning Julia Kurker, and radio blabbermouth Gregg Hill, who conducted the auction, during which he referred to the McCourts as "one of the most productive alcoholic families in America."

While that's certainly a gross exaggeration, the gala undoubtedly brings out the party animal in everyone, which explains the following exchange:

"What brings you here?"

"Booze."

Go Get 'Em!

It's not hard to get behind an organization whose motto is "Fighting Bad Guys Since 1961," so when Amnesty International hosted its 33rd annual Spring Benefit Concert and Dinner, it was a night full of superheroes.

Held to honor Nobel Peace Prize laureate Liu Xiabao and other prisoners of conscience in China, the evening began with a dinner at the Sheraton Commander. Present and accounted for were such peaceniks as Sufi Muslim mystic healer Thalassa Scholl, Pill Hillbillies Coco and Kyra Montague, the ethereal Kristina Lyons and her restaurateur husband, Patrick, TV producer and force of nature Jennifer Donaldson, banking's answer to Auntie Mame, Dora Lewin, Italian maestro Federico Cortese, global newsroom chief Charlie Sennott, literary agent Jill Kneerim, and Iranian dissidents Kamiar and Arash Alaei, who spent years in prison for speaking out against the government and gave an eye-opening speech about just how good we have it here and how bad they've got it elsewhere. As one woman put it: "Stoned to death for adultery?! Half my friends would be dead."

Summing it up, one guest said, "This kinda reminds you that there's a range of do-gooders—from those who have dinner in hotel ballrooms to the ones who put their lives on the line." ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

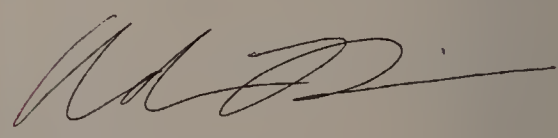
The Great Outdoors

A lowering sunlight sifts through the boughs, dappling the trail in emerald and gold. Branches sigh overhead, and from some unseen glade comes the raking call of a corncrake, but otherwise the forest sleeps. Ahead, a moss-chinned boulder marks a fork in the path. For no better reason than the tint of the soil, I decide to turn left.



Adam DeTour

Through a fence of birches at the top of a brambled ridge, I see a wink of steel. There's a jangle and whinny, and, out from the trees, the Black Knight spurs forward! Garlanded with the jawbones of his victims, he lifts his lance in a mocking salute. Then, with a scrotal-tightening caw, a pterodactyl swoops past, its talons messing up my hair worse than the mayor's syntax. Enraged, I shake my lightsaber at the unsmiling heavens. My vengeance shall be bloody and clichéd!

This is exactly the sort of thing I used to daydream when, as a boy, I tromped around the woods near my home, imagining a life less prosy. Were I growing up nowadays, I wouldn't bother. Videogames are simply too good. No child in his right mind has any reason to leave the house if he has access to a decent-sized screen and a copy of The Elder Scrolls III. In my day, videogames had three pixels to rub together and all the thrills of a plastic spork. It's no wonder we went to the woods to experiment with alcohol and drugs.

As a tribute to obsolete escapism, then, this issue is an old school "pick your own adventure" book. See? Print isn't dead.

RANDALL LEVERE tries to separate himself from the pack. In 2010, he launched Erba Cycles, a line of bamboo bikes fashioned together with hemp or flax fiber epoxy. "I had some experience as a grunt on people's boats and studied structural engineering," he says. "For someone with my background, this was the perfect storm." Though heavier than the carbon-fiber bikes he favors for competitive racing, the cycles, handcrafted in his South End studio, have garnered a cult following. "There's something about it that has to resonate with you. Either it's the eco angle or the aesthetic, or some people just really love the ride quality. Mostly it's people who just want to turn a few heads."

ONE FOR THE ROAD

Pizza isn't the only kind of pie coming out of Area Four's wood-fired ovens. In fact, the slice of the day is the headlining dessert on pastry chef Katie Kimble's menu. But, Kimble admits, a wedge flowing with fruit can be a bit messy for customers on the go. It's for these folks that she created the tidier hand pies that sell from the pastry case. The flaky, buttery discs envelop a choice of rotating fillings that follow the seasons' whim: rhubarb-pineapple, apple-caramel, and, any day now, sweet local strawberry.

PICK YOUR OWN IMPROPER ADVENTURE

Dear Reader, This magazine is different from other magazines. YOU are in charge of what happens. There are many possible outcomes–some disastrous, even deadly! Your choices will determine the ending. Only YOU can decide what happens in the Great Improper Pick Your Own Adventure!

It's a warm summer day, and you stand next to a shiny blue plastic box in the Back Bay. It contains a stack of very pretty magazines with a picture of a former sitcom star on the cover. Flipping through a copy, you can't help but marvel at the artful photography, the lush paper stock and the judicious, graceful editing. It's such a superb source of entertainment and useful information about local goings-on, you almost feel guilty about taking it for free. Maybe, just this once, in gratitude for all these years of high-quality reading material, you ought to mail a $100 bill to that guy who writes the editor's letter. I mean, your mom raised you to do the right thing. Surely, she would have wanted this.

And, after all, it's what Jesus would do.

As you flip delightedly through the magazine's contents, your gaze falls on an eye-catching headline: BETTER OFF UNDEAD. The article reads: "Anyone who's ridden the T lately knows that grotesque apparitions from the maw of hell are on trend, which begs the question: How do you match a pearlescent, rotting flesh tone with this season's vibrant pastels? The secret, says our style-maven–turned–demon-hunter, is in the accessories. We call it 'The Flair Witch Project'"...

TRIPLE PLAY

Southern sides and Remy a makes move

UNLIKE A BMW M3, the new M3 from Jason Owens has plenty of seating and is affordably priced. Like the motorsport sedan, Owen's is a vehicle made for an entertaining road trip. M3 takes its name from the hearty helpings of "meat and three" served at the Nashville restaurants where Owen ate with his family as a youngster.

Owens made his mark in this area with the Biltmore Bar and Grille in Newton and Local 149 in Southie. While no longer involved with those properties, as owner and self-described "executive concept chef," he expects M3 to be a much longer-term commitment. Tucked into lively Davis Square, M3 focuses on authentic Southern recipes prepared with local ingredients and some choice "imported" items, such as Virginia hams and pork products from Tennessee.

Go H.A.M.

Owens also likes to use the whole hog, and plans to make everything from stocks to charcuterie in house. While not yet on the menu, he says a pig's ear sandwich is "in the cards."

PORK WILL OF COURSE not be on the menu at the halal Bab Al-Amoud Café, a new neighborhood spot in Cambridgeport on Western Avenue. The café offers the expected Middle Eastern specialties—falafel, hummus, shawarma—as well as a variety of curries, including goat and grilled fish. Bab Al-Amoud is open all day, serving a full breakfast, lunch and dinner.

JERRY REMY'S SPORTS BAR domain is expanding outside of Boston. This fall, a 250-seat waterfront outpost is slated to open 50 miles south in Fall River.

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

First Taste

TIPPING POINT

Chef Brian Poe established himself as something of a miracle worker when he took the Rattlesnake from a tequila-soaked dive to a Latin-fusion destination. "That process was the most rewarding of my career," he says. "Before I got there, people were scared to even eat the nachos." Leaning on the bar of the Tip Tap Room, the neighborhood spot he'll open this month on Beacon Hill, Poe looks ready for the next challenge. The space was once the Shangri-La, better known as "the Shang," a greasy Chinese restaurant with a tendency to look the other way when Suffolk freshmen wanted a scorpion bowl. Before his arrival, the storefront had fallen into disarray. Most of the interior wasn't salvageable. "I had a clean slate to do whatever I wanted, and that was very exciting."

Garage doors now slide up in the warmer months and borrow from the bustling energy of the street. A new birch-front bar features 36 taps, with around 13 dedicated to local microbrews. This is where beverage director Justin Dalton-Ameen, formerly of Parish Cafe, will hold court.

Beer is a key component in the restaurant's concept, but the impressive list of meat tips takes center stage. Fashioned from nearly every protein imaginable—including elk, buffalo and goat—the selection goes far beyond the charred chunks of steak or turkey. "You can make a tip out of almost anything, so there aren't any limitations," says Poe. In addition to the rotating game selections, he'll dish up entrees like lamb tips with chèvre mashed potatoes, sautéed greens and tzatziki or tofu with garlic-roasted portabellos, red peppers, avocado and spinach quinoa. "Now I'll get to play with the spicy flavors that I love at the Rattlesnake, and then come here and do whatever I want," he says. "It's perfect." KYLE WRIGHT

TUNED IN

Rye Rye plays House of Blues with the Scissor Sisters on June 30.

How do you categorize your sound?
I say I keep it in party-vibe, and I keep it fun. Like crazy runs with a heavy bass.

M.I.A. gave you advice...
She told me I've got to put my foot down and stay true to who I am and to my sound. And for fashion, she said to wear anything I want. As long as I do it with confidence, no one can tell you anything different.

Favorite track on your album?
I feel like "DNA" is my anthem. It just describes me. I'm so full of life, and when I go out, I'm the life of the party, and I'm always having fun and people be like, "You're just naturally high off life," so it's in my DNA.

What's the most exciting part of touring with Scissor Sisters?
I heard they had a gay fan-base, so I'm just excited to share the stage. It's going to be insane and crazy.

With whom do you dream about collaborating?
Missy Elliot. I looked up to her growing up and like that she based a lot of her videos around dancing, and she's creative. She showed that you can do it without sexually exploiting yourself and made a great impact on the industry.

After your cameo in 21 Jump Street, do you want to continue acting?
Yeah, I want to get more into it. I'd love to play a cartoon. People always say, "You should do voice-overs" because of my voice, and I love kids a lot. I think that'd be cool to take on. I'd also want to play a 'hood girl.

How are you balancing motherhood with your touring schedule?
I've got a lot of support from my mother and from the father's side of the family. When I'm away, they watch her, and that's a blessing. I miss her when I'm away, but when I'm working they take care of her. KYLE WRIGHT

Berry Good

During strawberry season, "pick your own" doesn't just apply to fruit. Here's how three local creameries stack up.

Chilly Cow, Inc.

No question that the berries (though bright and fruity) play second fiddle to the cream here—it's inevitable when the base is thick, buttery custard. This is, by far, the most decadent version around town, and worth the ride to Arlington.

Christina's Homemade Ice Cream

As good as the classic gets: dense, luscious dairy that's full of sweet strawberry swirls. A high-caliber crowd-pleaser.

$4.80, 1255 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-492-7021) christinasicecream.com

Toscanini's

As usual, the most inventive interpretation comes from Gus Rancatore's kitchen. Milky and rich, this ice cream has plenty of berry chunks and pops of punchy orange zest.

Drink of the Moment

GET A COMPLEX

NAME: 1851 PRICE: $15

INGREDIENTS: Michter's bourbon, dessert wine, ginger simple syrup, lemon, malbec.

INVENTOR: Beverage director Juan Carlos Perez.

TASTE: A float of dry malbec infuses the nose, with a following sweetness coming from the bourbon and syrup. Maturing with each sip, the crushed lemon and ginger cut the dessert wine's sauvignon blanc fruit. As the flavors warm and drift into each other, the whole assumes a rounded complexity that's grounded in the whiskey base.

WHY IT'S AN ALLEGORY FOR LIFE: Every stage has a different flavor—and color—as the malbec settles like a red mist into the drink's murkier depths. You need to drain the glass to the lees to experience all it offers, and there's a certain order to things. "I don't put a straw in it," says Perez.

WHY THE NAME?: Unlike the cocktail, the name is simple: the jail that's now the Liberty Hotel was built in 1851.

PAIR WITH: Seared scallops from the bar menu. "Summery drinks, summery food."

APPEAL: Bourbon and malbec please tipplers who embrace full, strong flavors. Dessert wine tickles sweeter palates. Mixing the two might end up satisfying neither, but the cocktail coheres. And lest the cosmo crowd harbor doubts: "I mixed this up for a group of about six girls," recalls Perez. "They said, 'I don't like bourbon, but that's awesome.'"

STILL WAITING

TO "THE PERFECTIONIST MEAL ORDERER" FROM THE JUNE 6 ISSUE: You wrote, "I know we're all very happy to let women be free and bold and utterly untethered, but the b* called @MeanWaiter totally crossed the line." Letting women be "free and bold and utterly untethered" is a clue to your view of women. Would it have made a difference if the waiter were male? Slapping someone silly "'til your fing molars fell out" is an almost humorous leap from chivalry to extreme physical violence. On the bright side, I did have to look up what harridan meant.

Amused but not really surprised

I need to vent:

My wife and I, the proud poppa, were pleased to attend my son's graduation held inside the university's basketball arena. We made sure that we'd arrive at the destination a full hour early to secure our two general admission seats as close to the graduation stage as possible. As we entered, we were relieved to see so many open seats. Yet we were greeted with indignant looks, arm gyrations and "These seats are saved." Whatever happened to first come, first served? Am I wrong, or am I just being a crazy curmudgeon? Maybe I just need to be saved.

Is that one taken?

To the bouncer from Friday night:

I know your job description is to turn people away like a power-tripping frat bro hopped up on jungle juice, but when six girls dressed to the nines want to enter, you let them. Not only will it immediately increase your drink sales, you won't have to deal with those six annoying girls anymore.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS

Maternal bonds and the travails of bullying in an intergenerational novel

KATHLEEN LYNCH, a library archivist, meets Natalie when the 13-year-old stumbles in to research her family's history. Buried in the safe hush of the collections, Natalie escapes the cyber-taunts of her former best friend. Meanwhile, divorce has left Natalie's mother sedated on sleeping pills and her father oblivious to his daughter's pain. Calm, warm Kathleen endures a corresponding loss: Her own daughter has disappeared without a trace.

Kathleen and Natalie find themselves drawn together in a substitute-mother-and-daughter relationship. Natalie's research leads to a box in her mother's cellar containing a memoir written by Irish immigrant Bridget O'Connell Callaghan, who'd worked for the rich Turner family in 1925, caring for their children.

So Far Away
by Meg Mitchell Moore

Moore lives in Newburyport.

Bridget's tale is a mini-novel tucked inside Natalie's story, yielding surprising parallels. Pitted in a prickly rivalry with Mrs. Turner, Bridget paints an atmospheric picture of a faded era. After her seduction by Dr. Turner, a pregnant Bridget finds salvation in marriage to Declan, an Irishman.

This engaging book is filled with parallels of loss and salvation, cruelty and kindness, and intergenerational rapport soothing the bullied heart. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 131: "All around them girls were in danger. And obviously she was ill-equipped to help: look what happened the last time she'd tried. She thought of Susannah in the bath, playing with a yellow ducky, Susannah climbing aboard the school bus, turning to wave, all the hope and optimism in the world on her face. It went so quickly from that to the rest of it, it took your breath away."

LITTORAL INTERPRETATION

Sun, sand and exceptional service at Cape Cod's Wequassett Resort

BAY STATE It's hard to avoid a charming, waterfront vista.

SCOOPED FROM THE SAND of the mid-Cape, just above the elbow's joint, is a pocket of aptly named water called Pleasant Bay. A demure coastline of watercolor beach and scrub, it boasts a 27-acre stretch along its bottom known as the Wequassett Resort and Golf Club, a place that feels far away from the shuddering asphalt of Route 6. Turning onto the grounds, the first impression a visitor gets is that of disciplined landscaping. Sculpted out of hydrangeas, Adirondack chairs and pale cedar, the Wequassett is arguably the Cape's most pristine nook.

Hewing to a classic Cape Cod palette of soft blue, cloud white and sea green, the property centers on a decorous 19th-century post office converted into restaurants and a gift shop. Its spirit, however, resides in the shoreside pool that laps above a private, driftwood-splintered beach. Cabanas and linen recliners stand at attention around the water, flanked by a firepit and banquettes. Lolling in the Jacuzzi at the top of a decorative waterfall that purls into the pool, soaking in the heat and a sun-washed sky, it's easy to imagine that you've floated across the tropic line. Then you notice the pitch pines instead of palm trees, and you remember that dinner won't be conch, but Maine lobster. The Wequassett is, despite its island moods, a blue-blooded New Englander.

Dinner is a reason that locals visit 28 Atlantic, a fine-dining room with Shaker furniture and floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the bay. Water is its guiding principle—etchings of ships deck the muted walls, and the menu stars aristocratic seafood like halibut with sauce mousseline and roast salmon with eggplant caviar. So, too, the service flows with friendly grace—the attentiveness is so personal that it's surprising to see that the resort specializes in wedding parties. Chef James Hackney is a veteran of L'Espalier, and he's made an urbane imprint on the cuisine since the departure of previous chef Bill Brodsky, who's opening City Landing

✓ Traveler's Checks

Golfers have direct access to the Cape Cod National Golf Club, a course designed by Brian Silva—one of the few in the world to let you thwack a Titleist into a cranberry bog. For sweatier sport, tennis pros are on hand at the four green clay courts.

Boat rentals—sail, motor and kayak—are available from a kiosk next to the resort's dock.

NOOK SHARP Tasteful opulence is the theme.

on the Boston waterfront next month. Hackney also elevated the menu at the Wequassett's pub, Thoreau's, a clubby, dark wood bar with the decor of a colonial inn and the bill of fare of a prime steakhouse: 24-carat martinis, heavy cuts of New York strip, a wine list that would have Robert Parker reaching for his thesaurus. The result is a powerful affront to bathing suit season.

Bathing, of course, is a big reason to vacation at the Wequassett. While you can cast your blankets on the beach, you can also fortify yourself with a packed lunch and ferry across the bay to a secluded stretch of the National Seashore. If seals and plovers aren't entertainment enough, underage guests can cry havoc and let slip their hysterics in the Children's Center, featuring an aquatic park with slides, swinging ropes, spray guns, fountains and—the jaw-slack joy of it!—a pirate ship. Inside the center, there's a high-tech battery of giant screens and game systems. Plus ice cream.

But a resort lives and dies on whether its guests love their rooms, and the Wequassett's walk the exacting line between understatement and opulence. Stay in one of the second-floor Signature Suites to get an eyeful of water and sun whenever you catch a glimpse of window or stretch out on the 184-square-foot balcony, or take a downstairs room for a private lawn space and outdoor Jacuzzi. The coastal palette infuses the upholstery and linens, while luxuries like walk-in showers, whirlpool tubs and remote-controlled gas fireplaces give the idyll a 21st-century jolt.

Which is precisely the Wequassett's appeal. It's a property that captures the textures of old Cape Cod, but substitutes raw cottage life with 42-inch flat screens and Molton Brown toiletries. Even the fried clams at the resort's Outer Bar and Grille are less oily, more deliberately seasoned than the customary grease clumps. The Wequassett is traditional New England, but it's polished to a world-class sheen. ×××

STREET LIFE

Uneven offerings throw Patricia Yeo's latest venture off balance.

Moksa
450 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-661-4900)
moksarestaurant.com

TINY DANCERS Bonito flakes add an umami element to the dancing shishito peppers.

THERE ARE TWO SCHOOLS of thought on chef Patricia Yeo. After a pair of high-profile closures, most recently Ginger Park in the South End, some believe she's a victim of bad luck, taken down by an enfeebled economy and insolvent partners. Others think she's just not as good as the hype.

Before its much-delayed opening in Central Square, Moksa seemed the perfect venue to spotlight Yeo's strengths. As an offshoot of Harvard Square's loungey Om, the 180-seat space forgoes the former's decorative Buddhas for a streamlined nightclub look of black walls and dim lighting. Moksa claims to serve Asian street food: a fire-hazard style of cuisine prepared with makeshift grills, steaming stockpots or precariously perched woks. From these humble beginnings, plates of marinated meats, bowls of handmade noodles and skewers of indescribable deliciousness emerge. There's no fuss over presentation, no hand-wringing over beverage pairings and, in many cases, no utensils. The focus is on taste and value. But street food is deceptively simple. There's a reason most vendors in Southeast Asia sell only one thing, and it's not just for efficiency's sake. Specialization yields transcendence, the definition of the Sanskrit word "moksha," after which Yeo's restaurant is named. Unfortunately, Moksa aims to do a lot without doing any one thing consistently well.

Two sections of the menu consistently disappoint: the roti and skewers. Described as Indian flatbread, the roti in both the corn and wheat incarnations came out as two dry open-faced tortillas with various toppings. Steak tartare ($12) was particularly unappealing, with a tasteless oyster subbing for the usual quail egg. Missing that unctuous binder and flavored with a super-sour kimchi, the roti tasted like mise en place on a plate rather than a cohesive dish. Even when the toppings were flavorful, as with the miso-braised short rib ($8), the bread remained lackluster. Skewers were minuscule lancings of unevenly cooked meats. The six pellet-sized lamb meatballs ($5) were overdone, while the pork belly ($4) could've used more time over a flame to melt the chewy fat. Chicken skin ($4) was crispy on one visit but like a rubber band on the next.

You'll have more luck with dumplings and wraps. Crisp crab Rangoons ($8) were filled with fresh red-crab perked up by a bright apricot mustard sauce. Berkshire pork pot-stickers ($8), with a pan-fried crunch on one side, were compact and juicy. A dipping sauce of garlic, ginger, sake and fish sauce vivified the bland fish in the Vietnamese tuna summer roll ($4). I recommend the fried watercress ($8) and shishito peppers ($6), both of which used their fishy complements—shrimp paste with the former, bonito flakes on the latter—to successful umami effect.

My fortune ran out with the steamed bun with miso eggplant ($6). The bread itself was fantastic, pillowy with an underlying sweetness, but the eggplant was unbearably salty and undercooked. The worst dish, however, was the pho. The broth was perplexing in being both fatty, as the layer of grease attested, and flavorless. Over-boiled turnips floated among wedges of lime, their skin a depressing shade of brown in the murky soup. Rivaling the pho in inedibility was a kalbi, or short rib, special. Served with ramp kimchi, every element, including the beef, was brined beyond comprehension. The lack of consistency affected even the dishes I enjoyed. Curly dan dan noodles ($12), the perfect foil for a ragout of spicy pork and mushrooms, were a hearty treat one night and a salt stew the next. Same with the Uighur lamb, which, at its best, came out as juicy chunks mixed with bell peppers and what the menu describes as rice gnocchi. At its worst, the meat was a strength-training tool for jaw muscles.

If anything approaches transcendence at Moksa, it's Noon Inthasuwan's cocktails. Creative combinations of spirits and herbs—like the Irish Swizzle, a blend of whiskey, dry sherry sour mix and shiso ($10)—they're lively without being gimmicky (although the marshmallow Peep in the Tokyo Chic ($11) is an exception). The same can't be said for Yeo's pan-Asian street food, which comes off as creativity and ambition untethered to execution. If Yeo is going to break out of her losing streak, it won't be with Moksa. ✖✖✖

Q: I HAVE SOME BLOTCHY BROWN PATCHES OF SKIN ALONG THE SIDE OF MY FACE AND ALONG MY JAWLINE THAT ARE DARKER THAN THE REST OF MY FACE. MY SKIN LOOKS STAINED AND THE COLOR IS UNEVEN. IT LOOKS WORSE AFTER I HAVE BEEN IN THE SUN. I HAVE BEEN TOLD IT IS MELASMA. HOW CAN I FIX THIS?

A: Melasma is a condition whereby the pigment in your skin darkens unevenly when exposed to the sun. It is more common in women than men, and causes include hormones, heredity and certain diseases. When melasma occurs during pregnancy, it is called a "pregnancy mask."

Once melasma appears, it can be lightened with a combination of topical products and clinical treatments. The recommended skin products include tretinoins and hydroquinone. Treatments that speed the lightening of these brown patches include moderate chemical peels, and /or fractional laser.

To help prevent melasma from returning, the use of a good broad spectrum sunscreen that contains 5% to 17% zinc oxide as a physical block, is mandatory.

MISSED CONNECTIONS

God, just let it be over already.

Seeking a Friend for the End of the World ★★☆☆
Starring Steve Carell, Keira Knightley, William Petersen, Rob Corddry, Connie Britton and Patton Oswalt. Written and directed by Lorene Scafaria. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

YEAH, IT'S THE END OF THE world, again. Only this time it's cuddly.

I don't know if we should blame the economy or the death of projected film, but a lot of filmmakers seem to be obsessed with the apocalypse at the moment. The recent spate of onscreen Armageddons kicked off with Lars von Trier's Melancholia, but we've also endured Jeff Nichols' Take Shelter and Abel Ferrara's 4:44 Last Day on Earth. Now we've even got a chintzy romantic comedy about the end of days.

Lorene Scafaria's Seeking a Friend for the End of the World borrows its title from a Chris Cornell lyric from one of his solo albums every Soundgarden fan bought and listened to exactly once. It also borrows (some might even say steals) a screenplay from Don McKellar's Last Night, a 1998 Canadian indie focusing on an unlikely love story taking place amid the chaos of a planet hours away from destruction. I looked in vain to find McKellar's name somewhere in the credits here, as Scafaria lifts entire scenes and plotlines from his picture, but there doesn't seem to be any acknowledgment. I can only hope he received an envelope full of cash for his trouble.

> By the one-hour mark, it's just another opposites-attract romcom.

Steve Carell stars as Dodge, who, like all his roles nowadays, is a downtrodden man who's wasted his life in middle-class purgatory. A gifted clown, Carell's too often called upon to be forlorn, what with those giant eyes and a vaguely haunted air about him. Seeking a Friend for the End of the World kicks off with Dodge listening to a radio broadcast announcing that NASA's efforts to destroy a 70-mile-long asteroid on a collision course with Earth have failed (I guess Bruce Willis and Ben Affleck didn't come through this time), and that we're all going to be extinct in a matter of weeks. Hearing the news, Dodge's wife promptly leaves him.

So it goes. The end is nigh, but our hero still attempts to sell insurance for a living, scoring queasy laughs off a cleaning lady who doesn't speak much English and obviously didn't get the news. There are riots in the streets, but the movie doesn't have enough of a budget to show them.

There's also a party attended by a gaggle of folks played mainly by L.A. stand-ups, who get down in an atmosphere suddenly devoid of consequence. Rob Corddry and Connie Britton make brief appearances, each hinting at the possibilities of a more interesting film as their marriage disintegrates under the stress of oncoming doom. There are a few scene-stealing one-liners from the great Patton Oswalt, explaining how women no longer worry about STDs, pregnancy, or even if you're related. His character is also psyched to try heroin because it was always on his bucket list.

But Dodge sits out the party, moping in the bathtub. Sadly, the movie sticks with him and foists an encounter with Keira Knightley's flighty British transplant. Penny's a girl who wears black nail polish and listens to vinyl, which is pretty much the extent of her characterization. She's erratic, sleeps for days and is the kind of screenwriter's device who exists to shake up the world of buttoned-down protagonists like Dodge.

Scafaria is trying something interesting here by positioning stock formula beats in a pre-apocalyptic landscape. There's something almost quaint about the film's devotion to musical montages and predictable revelations in the midst of such chaos. But the scope narrows as the film goes along. Perhaps for budgetary reasons, the supporting players melt away, and we're stuck with an increasingly claustrophobic road trip with Carell and Knightley. By the one-hour mark, it's just another opposites-attract romcom, and Scafaria delves into some fairly absurd machinations to keep these two apart before the climactic scene when they're finally allowed to get together.

So many questions are better left unasked, particularly regarding [surprise cameo redacted], who somehow is able to fly a single-engine propeller plane from the U.S. to England, all for the sake of a plot point. (I want to see an alternate cut of them running out of fuel and plummeting into the ocean.) Huge portions of Seeking a Friend for the End of the World's third act are devoted to Dodge sitting around his apartment alone, listening to records.

There's an entire world out there that's just about to end, and this movie zooms in on the two least interesting people in it. ✖✖✖

TOO COOL FOR SCHOOL

Sleigh Bells mash dance and metal for a massive sugar buzz.

Sleigh Bells plays at House of Blues July 3.

ALEXIS KRAUSS WAS A fourth-grade teacher when Derek Miller waited on her table at a Brooklyn bistro. It was 2008, and the future producer/guitarist said he was looking for a singer. Now Krauss is rocking stages from Coachella to Saturday Night Live with their snowballing pop duo Sleigh Bells.

Along the way, Krauss ditched her school-ready conservative look for a studded leather jacket and torn hot pants. "I feel like she's embraced a side of herself that always existed but that she wasn't able to indulge," Miller says. "She looked very different. I didn't care. I'd just met this girl that was cool as shit and had a rad voice. Slowly, she just became this maniacal banshee. I sat back and watched the transformation."

Both of them, however, came to Sleigh Bells with professional stage experience. Krauss, 26, was a child actress hustling Manhattan gigs when she was cast as the singer for the short-lived girl group RubyBlue. Miller, 30, played in the Florida hardcore band Poison the Well before he quit and learned to sample and mix beats.

> "I have no respect for genre whatsoever. I sorta listen to whatever is good sonically from whatever decade."

"I feel much less inhibited, which is why I wanted to get away from the paradigm of a four-piece rock 'n' roll band," Miller says from his Brooklyn home. "That's why I got into beat-making. Sonically, there are more possibilities. I can tap a bottle on the top of my kitchen counter and turn that into a kick drum."

Beats are big and busy in Sleigh Bells' densely layered attack, with pop sweetness coming through Krauss' vocals. Miller embraced his guitar again for the group's second album, Reign of Terror, nodding to his heroes Def Leppard with thick, highly compressed chords that buffet the pop melodies. Together, it suggests a lo-fi hip-hop/metal band produced by Phil Spector.

"I have no respect for genre whatsoever," says Miller, equally a fan of Madonna and Slayer. He blasts Ghostface Killah's The Pretty Toney Album when topping off Sleigh Bells' pre-show rituals, which also include push-ups and plenty of alcohol. "I sorta listen to whatever is good sonically from whatever decade."

When Sleigh Bells performs live with drum-machine tracks pumped from an offstage laptop, the experience rivals a DJ set as much as a rock show. "It'd be fun to have a guy in the middle of the stage DJ-ing, but then suddenly we're like rap-rock, and I want to avoid that," Miller says. He acknowledges the hard sell for mainstream rock fans used to a live rhythm section, like the audience at Sleigh Bells' last Boston stop, opening for the Red Hot Chili Peppers at TD Garden. "For it to really work, we need [fans] to be on our side. When we have them, I feel unstoppable."

The momentum should shift when Sleigh Bells headlines House of Blues on July 3. As on Saturday Night Live, the duo continues to utilize second axeman Jason Boyer to cover the many guitar harmonies from Reign of Terror. "It was too much of a compromise to leave them out, and I'm certainly not going to put guitar parts on the [backing] track," Miller says. "There is a limit."

Boyer also appears to be Miller's onstage doppelganger, playing another Jackson guitar (an '80s metal staple) before a wall of Marshall amps. "I like symmetry as well, so now Alexis has guitar players on either side," Miller says. "We kinda dress alike anyway, so we think it's funny. We don't take ourselves seriously."

A sports fan taken to wearing varsity jackets (and rooting for his home state's Miami Heat), Miller doesn't pursue a particular aesthetic with Sleigh Bells. "Without sounding pretentious, I try to make as few decisions as possible creatively, and I don't really labor over direction," Miller says, though he adds that he'll set aside his guitar on the band's next album. "I'm always pleasantly surprised when anything interesting happens." ✖✖✖

The downside of social clubs

GROUCHO MARX supposedly said, "I refuse to join any club that would have me as a member." We're always being judged by others. Most of us are insecure enough to want to belong to certain groups: fraternities, country clubs, the college newspaper, co-op apartments, the right preschool (ouch), the dining club, the baddest motorcycle clan. We all have to strut our stuff, no matter how demeaning the process.

In my high school, there were clubs that had their own warm-up jackets, their own social hierarchies. One of them was the Trojans. Another was the Spartans. Trojan, of course, is the name of a popular condom brand, and people in the other clubs called it "the safest club in Brookline." Its members played tackle football, without much equipment, on the dirt fields at Cleveland Circle.

Hazing and bullying are as old as fire and the wheel. The Spartans, for example, ordered me to knit a jockstrap, to sing rhythm-and-blues love songs to their girlfriends, to powder puff their white bucks—all fairly prosaic, except for the jockstrap. I solved that problem by stealing a knitted cap from my baby sister and attaching a few long strings for tying around the waist. I think my creative jock got me into the club.

Even at boys' summer camp, where I was first sent when I was nine, rites of passage were the norm. Counselors would routinely paddle our butts, either with brooms or canoe paddles. The less popular boys would be told to put on bathing suits, but not before soaking them in cold water first. Not many things hurt worse than being paddled in a wet bathing suit. Even so, no one wrote home, or told their parents during visiting days. In preparation for those smiley, tearful events, we'd have to whitewash the large rocks leading to the bunks to make the parents think we lived in Pine-Sol–scented paradise.

In college, I learned that whenever we're judged, there are always at least two cruel, nasty, jealous or sadistic people, men or women, who have a stake in demeaning or putting us down. I know this was true in fraternities and sororities, but in frat life, the bullies could usually be controlled by the brothers who understood limits. More trying were the intellectual organizations, the competitions for literary, humorous or journalistic publications. Each of these clubs harbored the worst kind of bullies: Oscar Wilde wannabes intent on payback for how they were treated in school. The organizations seemed to share a common policy of getting the applicants drunk as skunks and pushing them over the vomit line. Out in the real world of marriage, children and country clubs, the flip side of alcohol is watched closely. If you show signs of overindulging as an applicant for a country club, you can kiss your candidacy good-bye.

Ironically, when it comes to country clubs, the less history you have in the community, the better your chance of admittance. If you move to Boston from Buffalo with one divorce and a history of kiting checks, but you had two college roommates fronting your application... whoosh, you're a slam dunk. If you chair a major nonprofit organization, run a public company, are an usher in your church, but you lived in Boston your whole life, there may be three classmates from fifth grade who've hated you since, or someone who felt screwed by you in a deal, and they'll poison the well. As I've been saying for years, Boston is all about sports, politics and revenge. We love to dwell on the past, and sometimes relish ruining someone else's present.

Boston may be the premier club city in America, topped only by New York in numbers, and outside of the U.S. by London, the original club town. We're still champion in both snobbery and debauchery. One fairly new element in the local club scene is the growing influence of women. There used to be a charitable association in which the members, all men, would gather in white tie and tails. Their wives would serve dinner and then back out of the dining room to retire. Those days are gone forever now, as women push the program and admission agendas, bringing new life—even creative destruction—to invent a new brand of exclusivity. Even Harvard now has sororities. At last, the chances for both sexes to choose who's in and who's out.

SMALL WONDERS

The thrill and shame of watching Extreme Midget Wrestling

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I'M PULLING UP TO MY HOUSE after a 12-hour drive when I get a text message from my friend Derek. He and another buddy are at a nearby bar, and I should join them. Normally after driving 700 miles I'd want to just hit the sack, but this is no normal night. This is a chance to get out and broaden my cultural horizons with a theatrical performance intended to challenge the assumptions of the reliable narrator and confront the observer's role in the creation of art. By which I mean, it's time for Extreme Midget Wrestling.

Soon after my arrival, a troupe of what looks like very short handymen files in and assembles the steel ring right there on the bar's dance floor. These guys are pros. If the wrestling thing doesn't work out, I've got an idea for a great HGTV show.

Ring complete, the first wrestler climbs in and stalks around the perimeter. We quickly realize that this fellow is the bad guy. We realize this because he gives us the finger and calls us inbred. "I'm not even a midget!" he sneers. I boo loudly at this confession.

This fellow is about to get his comeuppance, and for that we can thank Baby Jesus. Bald and small, even in comparison to his fellow wrestlers, Baby Jesus reminds me of Verne Troyer as he storms out into the ring. But thoughts of Mini-Me evaporate when Baby Jesus sprints toward his assailant, does a standing backflip and kicks him in the face. He then does the worm and executes another flying kick to his stunned adversary. I'm not going to say this is on par with the birth of my kids as the best thing I've ever witnessed, but it's right up there.

Baby Jesus' triumph doesn't last long. Bad Guy throws him out of the ring and begins beating him with a crutch borrowed from a hobbled member of the audience. The crowd is outraged. We start a chant: "Je-sus! Je-sus!" I couldn't tell you the last time I went to a play or an opera, but I can now put a definite time stamp on the last time I saw a little person get attacked with a crutch while a crowd of people chanted the name of God's only son. I'm a man of sophisticated tastes.

Is it ethical to pay a group of differently heighted persons to grapple for my amusement?

During the interlude before the next match, I approach a wrestler named Lil Rampage to buy a signed photo (it's never too early to stock up on Christmas gifts for the family). He asks my name before bellowing into the mike, "Ezra, you think you could take a midget?" Lil Rampage looks strong. I say, "No." This ends our conversation, since Lil Rampage agrees with my assessment of his fighting prowess.

The next matchup pits Nasty Boy against Lil Rampage. Nasty Boy grabs the mike and declares, "I came to support midget violence. And how do I do that? I beat the hell out of midgets." Nasty Boy warms up the ladies in the front row by asserting his sensitivity as a lover. "I don't do nothin' fast," he lecherously informs a woman who's easily two feet taller than he is. "It takes all damn day to climb a mountain." Note to Nasty Boy: Women don't enjoy being compared to mountains. I guess that's why they don't call him Lil Shakespeare.

Lil Rampage loses, but his night improves during the next act, when five girls from the audience have a contest to see who can give him the best lap dance. In just one of this evening's many surprises, the Extreme Midget Wrestling Federation audience includes a lot of attractive women. The winner is a brunette who quickly learns that this is one contest you really don't want to win, because your prize is a lap dance from Lil Rampage. If you guessed that Lil Jon's "Get Low" would be the song of choice for a midget lap dance, you guessed correctly.

By the time I leave, I've had one of the greatest nights in recent history, but my liberal-arts bourgeois guilt is kicking in and making me wonder if my entertainment came at the expense of others. I mean, is it ethical to pay a group of differently heighted persons to grapple for my amusement? And isn't "midget" a bad word?

If it is, then somebody should tell the midgets to stop using it. They're making money, getting lap dances and putting on a truly excellent performance. It's condescending to feel bad for them. Chances are, their jobs are better than yours. I'd wholeheartedly recommend you go see a show. Just don't sit in the front row. They don't call him Nasty Boy for nothing. ✖✖✖

ON OFF-SEASONS, DRAFTS AND BUCHHOLZ

LOVE DOCTOR KG and Doc's bond is too strong not to last.

5 CELTICS SUMMER PREDICTIONS

Goodbye Shuttlesworth Ray Allen's played his last game for the Celtics, and while it'll be sad to see him go, we understand. We understand why the team wants to move on. We understand why he wants to leave. And regardless of where he ends up, there's no question that Sugar Ray's earned fans for life in Boston. Same goes for you, Mama Allen. May your bespeckled jersey glisten for eternity.

KG Comeback There's no one in the NBA that Kevin Garnett loves and respects more than Doc Rivers. Coincidentally, there's no one in the NBA who's more desperate for Garnett to return than the C's coach. By the commutative property of KG, that means he'll be back. Basket supports (and rookies/foreigners/the media/everyone) beware.

Draft Day Trade The Celtics have two first round picks, but here's the thing: Rivers hates coaching young guys. And with a roster that already includes Avery Bradley, JaJuan Johnson and E'Twaun Moore, I'm guessing Doc would rather French kiss Bill Kennedy than add two more youngsters to the mix. Look for the Celtics to package the picks with the hope of trading up, or maybe…

Magic Touch You know we're headed for a summer of non-stop Dwight Howard rumors, and you're crazy if you think the Celtics won't be involved. Why? Danny Ainge can't help himself. And with a player like Howard, nor should he. Who knows if a deal will go through, but you better believe Ainge will try like hell to make it happen. How's Avery Bradley, Paul Pierce and three No. 1 picks sound? Awful? OK, good.

Rondo Stays Safe Ahh, summer. A time for beaches, barbecues and, if you're Rajon Rondo, sitting at home while the world rips you apart and your GM shops you around like a stolen iPad. But not this year. This summer will be different for the C's young leader. No rumors. No speculation. Plenty of time to work on that foul shot!

1 ONE TRICK PONY

It's that time of year. No C's, no B's, no Pats, just Sox. In summers past that may have been enough to keep us high on life, but these days… well, let's just say we might need a little help. Maybe we can have some of whatever the owners are smoking if they think we're buying the sellout streak.

2 OFFSEASON PHONE CALLS

IT'S TIME... Heyyy, Tuukka. Peter Chiarelli here. Soooo, I've been thinking: How do you feel about starting this year? … Oh, Tim? No, no. Nothing's changed with Tim. He'll still be here, as far as I know. But it doesn't matter. You're our man now! By the way, you guys don't have Internet in Finland, right?

COACH TO COACH... Hey Bill, it's Tom Coughlin… Listen, what the hell are you trying to pull here? Is this some kind of perverted payback? Are you trying to make me mad? Well, it's working, you sloppy bastard! It's working! Ballard was our guy! … Wait a second, are you laughing? Are you seriously laughing right now? SCREW you, Bellichick. Screeeew you!

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/22: The NHL Draft gets underway in Pittsburgh, but you'll hear them booing Gary Bettman from here.

6/25: Anyone know a good steakhouse in Pawtucket? Daniel Bard turns 27.

6/28: Unibrows, unite! The NBA Draft is here, and so is your savior: Mr. Anthony Davis.

3 SOX STORYLINES

Role Reversal Dating back to September, we've always had the pitchers to blame for the Sox struggles. Lately, it's all about the bats. But hey, at least we know the pitchers can still bring it, right? Once the line-up's healthy, the arms will be there to help carry the load. And if all else fails, Jumpin' Johnny Pesky's still lurking in the shadows, ready to take Boston to the next level.

Smelly Gonzalez Adrian Gonzalez is a mess. No power. Gross average. The discerning eye of a drunken frat guy at last call. He's a big-time disaster. And while there's reason to be patient, the will to do so is wearing thin.

Count on Clay? Buchholz has been unbelievably inconsistent over his six years with the Sox. So good when he's good, so bad when he's bad. And right now (to quote the worst song ever) he's: "So good! So good!" He's got everyone dreaming big, and this time I'm hoping he doesn't rudely wake us up.

The perfect city car.

Soroff On MATT LEBLANC

The actor tells us about good TV, bad movies and playing dumb, smartly.

MATT LEBLANC, 44, is currently starring in the second season of the BBC/Showtime comedy Episodes, in which he plays himself. Born and raised in Newton, he attended Newton North High School. Best known for his role as Joey Tribbiani on the legendary sitcom Friends, he won three Emmy and Golden Globe nominations and a Screen Actors Guild Award during the show's 10-year run. LeBlanc played the character for two more years on the spin-off Joey, while on the big screen his credits include Lost in Space, Charlie's Angels and its sequel. For his work on Episodes, LeBlanc earned an Emmy nomination and a Golden Globe Award. He lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: How difficult is it to play yourself?
Matt LeBlanc: It's a real stretch. Seriously, the character isn't very much like me. The point of the character is sort of the public perception of celebrity—in this case, me.

So you're actually just a Newton mush?
I'm just a quister mush. [Translation from Newton slang: a stand-up guy.]

Is it more difficult to play dumb or smart?
It's harder to play dumb convincingly. But if you only play dumb, nobody believes you're smart, so maybe that makes it harder.

Is the backstory of Episodes based on imported British shows like The Office?
It definitely mocks that trend. English TV is sort of a sounding board for the American networks. And Episodes is a mockery of that.

Favorite British TV show?
Top Gear. Basically, it's a talk show, and there are three hosts. They test cars and have these wacky adventures all over the world. They do things like hitch a pair of campers to two cranes and smash them together to see which one is the toughest. The show is done at an airfield, and they have a racetrack. Everyone who goes on sees how fast they can go. It's pretty entertaining.

Do you get into sports rivalries with other actors?
Not really. I'm not a huge sports fan, but if I'm going to root for a team, it's definitely going to be the Patriots, Red Sox, Celtics or Bruins.

So it's not like you're going to punch out Jack Nicholson if the Lakers beat the Celtics?
No. You can't hit your elders.

Anything you'd like to erase from your résumé?
Not really. I've made some bad moves, but I learned from them. I wouldn't have that knowledge if I hadn't made some mistakes.

Thing you know now that you wish you'd known when you were just starting?
Don't eat the donuts at the craft-service table.

Did Friends make you so rich you never have to work again?
[Laughs.] Yes.

Worst thing you ever read about yourself in a tabloid?
That I was a cokehead.

How good is your Boston accent?
It's pretty fin' quista, mush! How's yours?

Reality TV: an art form, or a cheap way to avoid paying writers and AFTRA wages?
I think it's supply and demand. People want it, so the networks make them. If nobody liked them, trust me, they wouldn't be on TV. Same thing with the tabloids—if people aren't buying them, they're not going to be there.

So you don't resent them?
No. Why should I?

How about critics?
Opinions are like aholes. Everybody's got one, and they all stink.

Actor you could most easily play twins with?
C'mon, that's an easy one. Matt LeBlanc.

Are you a good cook?
Yeah, I am. I make lasagna, homemade pasta, sauce, meatballs. Eggplant parm is my mother's specialty.

Who's the hottest of Charlie's Angels?
The show? You gotta go with Farrah Fawcett. The movie? It's a toss-up, I think, between Cameron Diaz and Lucy Liu.

Drew Barrymore's going to be pissed at you.
No. Drew knows how much respect I have for her. She'd be angry if I said she was the sexy one.

Do you think the film business is tough on TV stars?
I think the wall of segregation is coming down slowly. Television and movies are very different. Movies are an event. Television is in your home. It's like being a part of the family.

I saw Lost in Space. Can I have my 10 bucks back?
You didn't like it?

I was underwhelmed.
Gimme your address, and I'll send you a check. I didn't make 10 bucks off of that movie, by the way.

Is Ashton Kutcher a good kisser?
I think you should probably ask Demi Moore.

Six degrees of Kevin Bacon?
I've met him.

Fantasy love-scene partner?
Your mother. [Laughs.] No, just kidding. I don't really have one.

Are you a mama's boy?
No. I'm my own man, goddamnit!

Role you wish you'd played?
DeNiro's part in Raging Bull. He so inhabited that character. It was a perfect performance.

Top three movies of all time?
Raging Bull, Scarface and maybe Forrest Gump... oh, and Ed. [Laughs.]

Last question: Boxers or briefs?
Boxer briefs. And it's good that was your last question because I just opened my first beer. ×××

SOCIAL CLIMBER

Bored with your gym's rock wall? At Quincy Quarries, within sight of the city skyline, there are outdoor climbs that'll test your strength, technique and possibly your safety equipment.

BY EZRA DYER / PHOTOGRAPHS BY JOSH CAMPBELL

TIE ONE ON
With belaying comes great responsibility.

PULL-UPS ARE NOT MY STRONG SUIT. I struggle to do... well, I don't even want to tell you how many I do, because it's a number insufficient to pass a third-grade phys-ed class. Sometimes when I'm hanging there, failing at pull-ups, I try to imagine that I'm hanging off a cliff, and I need to pull myself up or fall to my death. Even that doesn't help, because I know my toes are two inches off the floor. So I'm happy to discover, at Quincy Quarries, that the prospect of tumbling off an actual precipice is a wonderful motivator. It turns out that when there's really nothing beneath me, I get awfully good at pull-ups.

I'm nearing the top of a 30-foot bluff called Black Knight, and to reach the summit I need to execute a layback—climbing terminology for hauling your ass up and over an obstacle using brute power. I find a handhold, dig in and drag myself above a "roof," an overhang that from the ground looks like a non-navigable impasse. And that's it. I've climbed Black Knight. Chris O'Connell—the founder of the Boston Rock Gym and the man who's had my life in his hands these past few minutes—lets out the rope as I rappel back down to the ground. Rappelling, it turns out, is as fun as it looks in the movies.

I met O'Connell here this morning for a crash course in rock climbing. I've tried indoor rock walls and, as a kid, scaled my fair share of trees, but I've never looked at a sheer face of granite and thought, "Oh yeah, I could climb that." In fact, when we arrive at the first challenges, the adjacent White Knight and Black Knight, they don't immediately look climbable. I note that the graffiti covering the rocks ends about eight feet up, indicating that even reckless graffiti artists haven't attempted what I'm about to do.

O'Connell and I take a long walk around to the top, where he sets up a rope using locking carabiners and a steel anchor sunk into the granite. "How sturdy is that anchor?" I ask. "I know the guy who put this here," O'Connell replies. I hope the two of them are on good terms.

This setup is called top-roping, and it's a great way to climb, as there's an anchor at the top of your climbable object. The other, admittedly more badass, option, is called lead climbing. That's where you pound cams and nuts into the rock as you go, building your own safety system into the face of the cliff. That's a much trickier technique—partly because if you fall early on, you might hit the ground before the rope stops you. That's what happened to Roger Shaffer, a frequent climber who stops by to talk shop with O'Connell. I ask Shaffer where that incident occurred. He says right here on White Knight. He broke some ribs. Despite that unpleasant experience, he's back. "Once you get the bug, it's kind of hard to stop," he says. I'm glad we're top-roping.

MATTER OF SCALE

I don painfully tight climbing shoes and step into a harness. O'Connell cinches it tight, knots the rope and tells me to start. The first step is easy—it literally looks like a step, about a foot off the ground. Then I'm stuck. What seemed, from a distance, to be a featureless slab of sheer rock is, upon closer inspection, a featureless slab of sheer rock. This isn't your gym's rock wall, with its strategically placed handholds. I just don't see how this is possible. O'Connell, who's scaled the quarries countless times, points out the pattern of tiny ledges and fissures in the wall that I'm supposed to use as my stairway to the heavens. "See that up to your left?" he says, gesturing to some crack in the stone. "If you can grab that and then get your right foot over to that ledge, that'll get you to the point where you can probably rest for a minute." I should underscore that what O'Connell might call a ledge, you and I might call "a barely discernible imperfection in the rock that's roughly the thickness of a hotel-room notepad." And then, just as he promised, I get my foot over and dig a toe into this micro-terrace, and it's enough, somehow, to support my weight while I stretch above looking for an equivalent handhold. Thanks, magic climbing shoes.

About halfway up Black Knight, I'm stumped. I rappel back down, and O'Connell and I trade places so that he can show me the route. O'Connell has a big scar on his arm—this will be his first climb since he broke his left radius bone. The accident didn't happen on some Himalayan promontory, but at his gym, where he was standing on the top rung of a ladder and using a vacuum cleaner. This is a guy who's been climbing for more than 30 years, a guy who thinks it's fun to climb Interloper at New Hampshire's Whitehorse Ledge (a climb that's rated 5.10c, which in layman's terms translates to "super scary"). And the vacuum cleaner is what got him—meaning that ladder-vacuuming must be rated at least a 5.11.

Testing his newly healed arm, O'Connell scampers up Black Knight and shows me the route. I'm trying to pay attention to his pointers, but also to the rope in my hand, since I'm now the responsible party holding the belay device. Rock climbing would not be a good sport to engage in with anyone you'd describe as "estranged."

I'm pretty sure O'Connell could've reached the top even with one arm in a cast, so I give it another shot. If I can do this, I

PICK YOUR OWN IMPROPER ADVENTURE

After a pleasant al fresco lunch with fashion icon Marilyn Riseman, you continue your stroll, detouring to view the idiosyncratic statuary along the Comm. Ave. Mall. You're scratching your head over the bronze cast of naval historian Samuel Eliot Morison when a mysterious figure emerges from behind a tree, narrowly avoiding a pack of pedigree terriers out for their afternoon romp. Cloaked and hooded, the dark figure rasps, "Valar morghulis..."

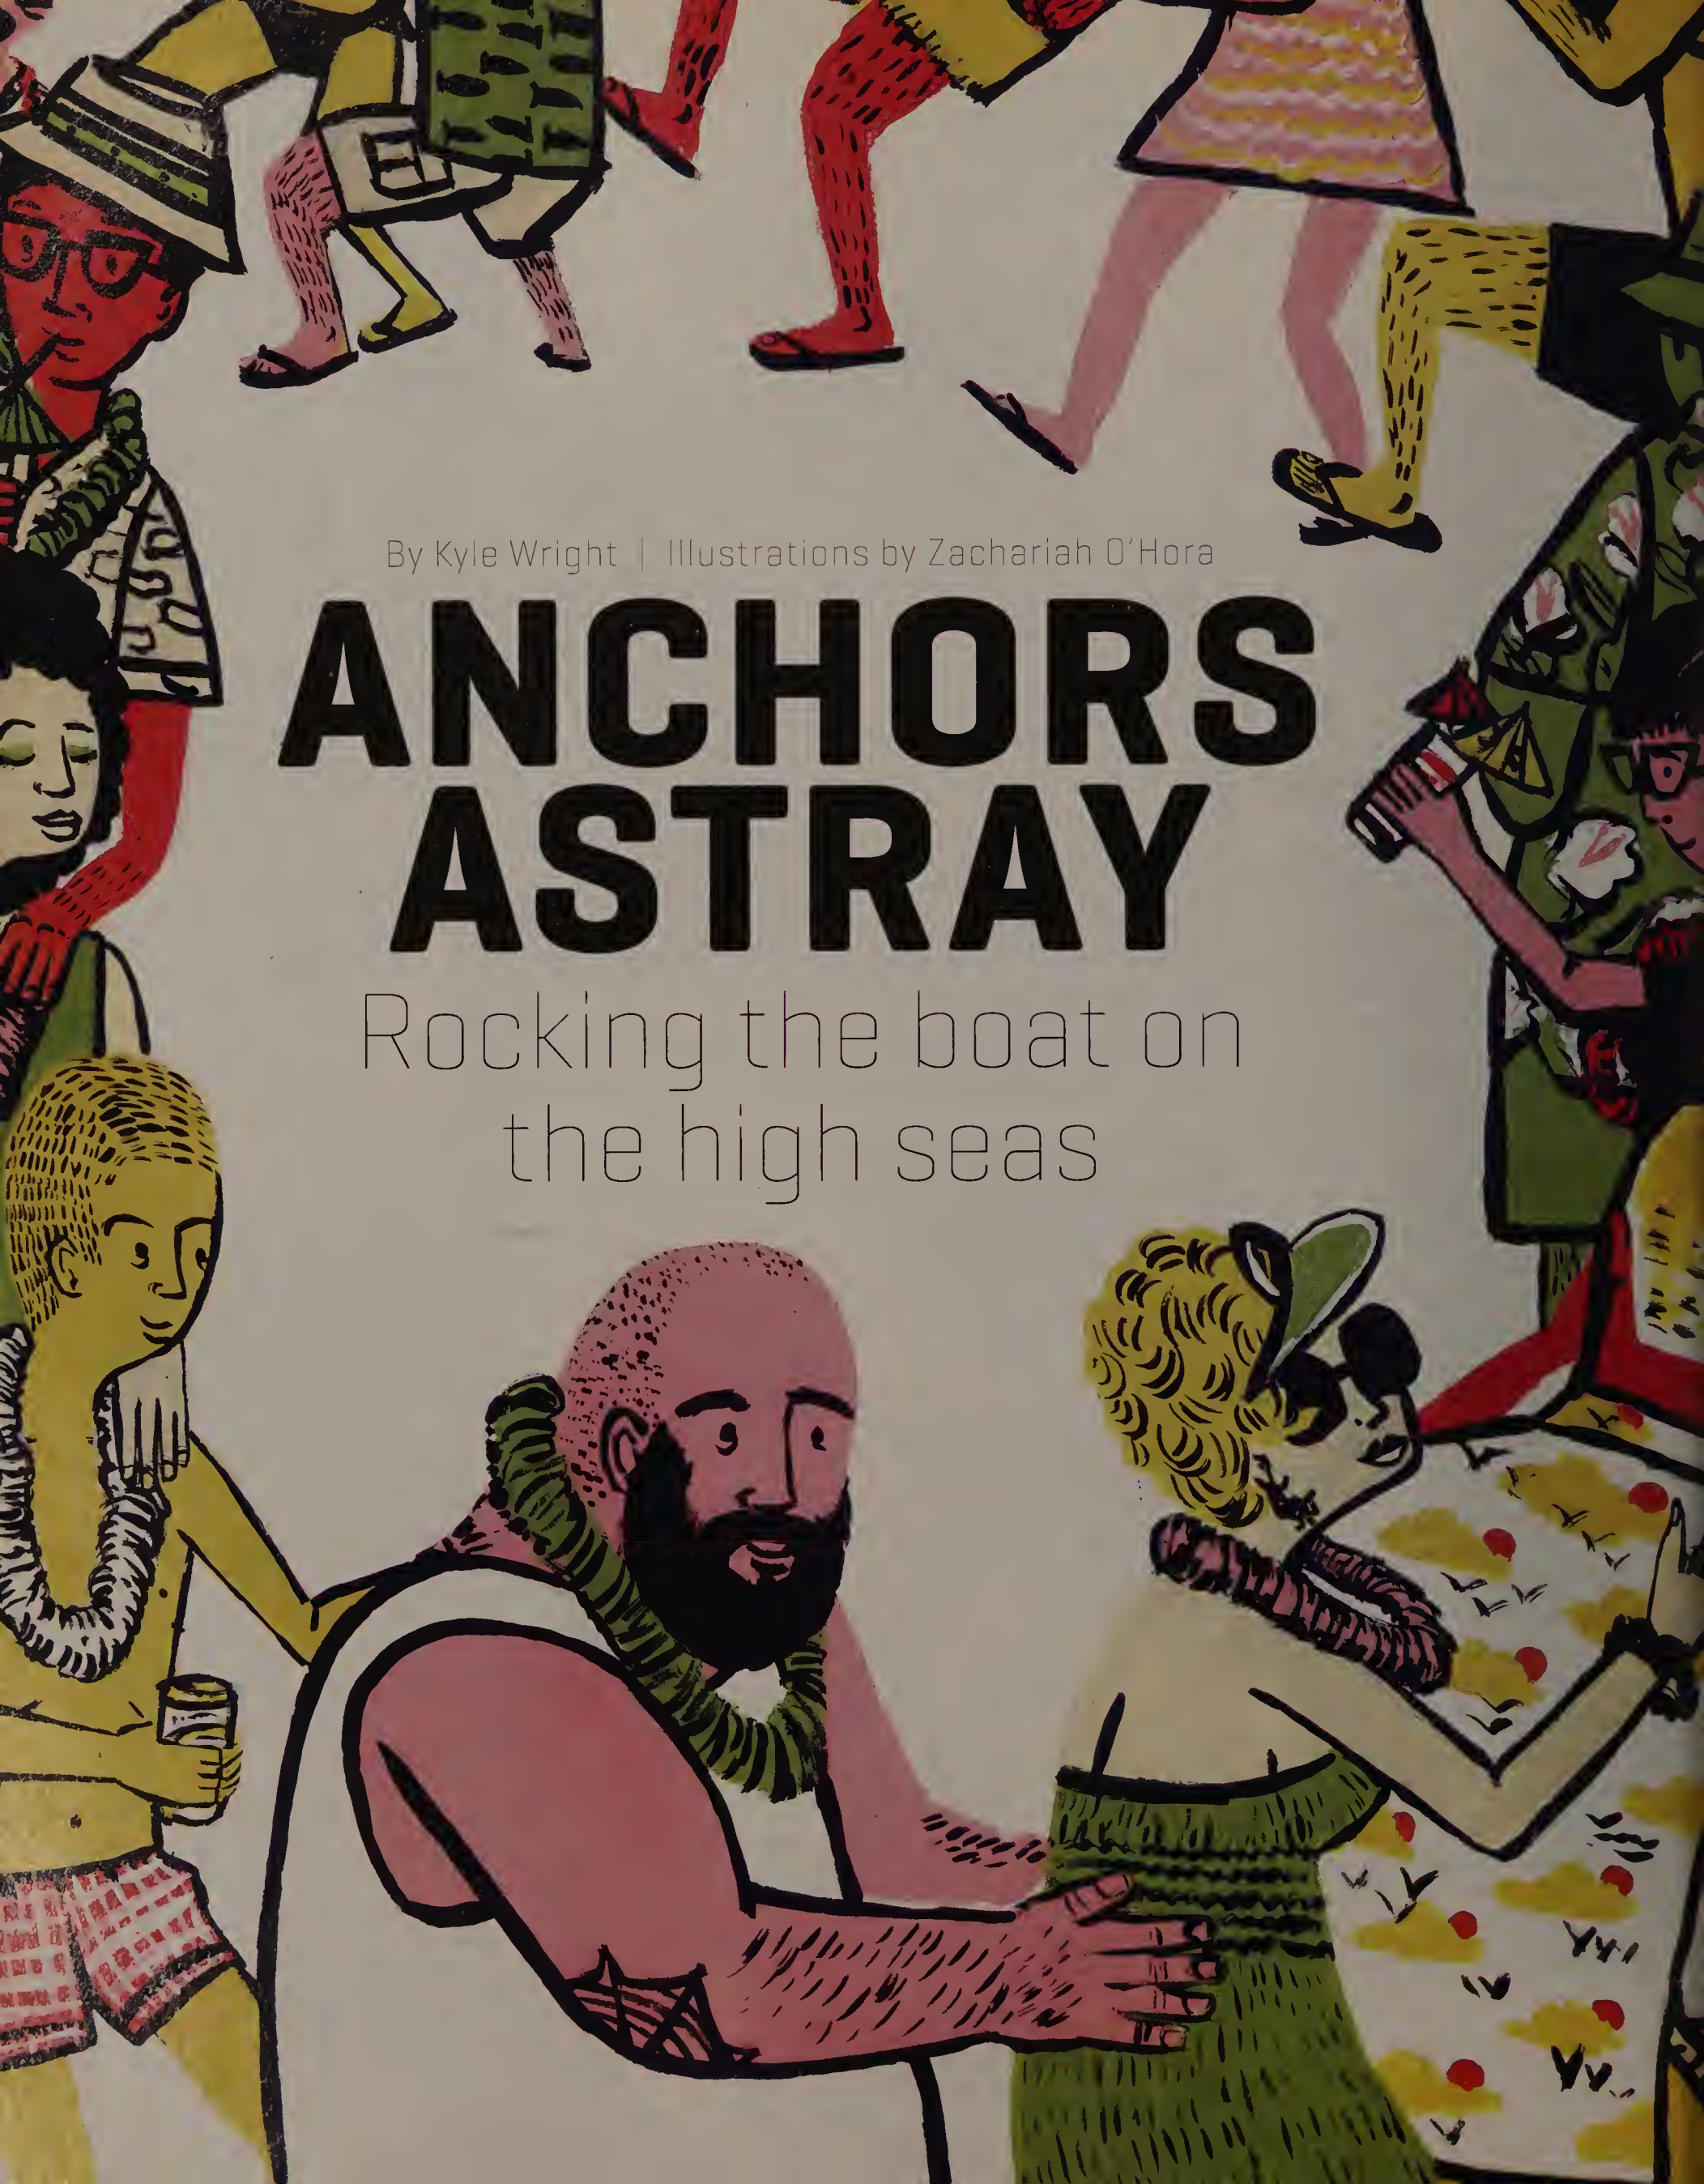
☛ If you say, "Sorry, I'm not interested in a free personality test," TURN TO PAGE 12 win. I'll go back to the Marshfield Fair and conquer that climbing wall that has a $100 bill at the top, making that carnie wish he hadn't messed with an experienced cliff master. A few minutes and one tense over-the-roof layback later, I've done it. Time to quit while I'm ahead.

"Want to try White Knight now?" O'Connell asks. To my surprise, I say yes. And I climb that one, too. Then we go over to a new spot on the other side of the quarry, a much taller climb called Layback, named for the exhausting move required to scale it. Halfway up, sore and drained, I fall. Thanks to the belay, I merely swing out away from the rock and back into it with mild flailing and scraped knuckles, but it's still a terrifying sensation to lose your grip while you're 30 feet up and feel safety slipping away from you. I'm glad I experienced the sensation, but I'd never want to know the feeling of a 40-foot fall—a feeling that O'Connell's endured on multiple occasions.

After a rest to regain my composure, I resume my attack on Layback. A few times I feel the belay rope go taut, and I yell at O'Connell to stop cheating. If I'm going to do this, I want to do it without getting hoisted like a piece of furniture on a Dutch gable. Although, if he was subtly helping me on the Knights and I just didn't notice—well, I'm not complaining. Without that confidence, I wouldn't be over here falling off the face of a quarry and rethinking my lifelong claim that I'm not afraid of heights. As I look over my shoulder at the view—can I see the ocean?—I begin to think that maybe that phobia is fairly prudent.

After much swearing and several minor abrasions, I'm at the summit. I pause for a moment to savor the triumph. I've never climbed a rock before this morning, and now I'm at the top of a 5.6 (on a scale of 5 to 5.15). That's solidly intermediate! Which just goes to show what you can do when you put your mind to it, and have one-on-one coaching from an expert with 30 years' experience who occasionally leans on his end of the belay rope during crucial moments.

To-do list: Don't fall off this rock.



I'd go back to Quincy quarries—and not just to spray graffiti and drink 40s. I can see how, as Shaffer put it, you catch the bug. Reaching the top is exhilarating, but getting there requires a degree of mental focus that's almost therapeutic. When you're on that wall, clinging like a tree frog, you're thinking about nothing except how to make your next move. That's it. No e-mail, no phone. Your to-do list consists of, "Don't fall off this rock."

That's a to-do list I want. I think O'Connell would agree with me that the vacuuming can wait. ✖✖✖

ANCHORS ASTRAY

Rocking the boat on the high seas

ONE NIGHT OVER DRINKS, I mentioned to a friend that I was going on a cruise to Bermuda. "Why would you want to be trapped on a boat for days when you could just fly?" he asked. I wasn't entirely surprised by this reaction, considering I had wondered the same thing. It didn't help my case that the Costa Concordia had recently capsized off the coast of Italy and Titanic was about to be released in 3D.

I defended my travel choice by explaining that there were far worst places to be stuck than on a massive ship ("It's just like a floating five-star resort!"), and that, while Bermuda is incredibly beautiful, it's also pretty boring. I clearly wasn't alone in this mindset. With only one port-of-call, the trip isn't designed for sightseers, but the Norwegian Dawn's Boston-to-Bermuda itinerary is a frequent sellout, giving my floating resort theory a pair of sturdy sea legs. ➜

"YEAH, BUT THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A CRUISE and a five-star resort is that most of the people on that ship are cruisers. There aren't any cruisers at Canyon Ranch," he countered. If you haven't cruised before, the definition of "cruiser" matches the Walt Disney World demographic: Teva sandals, fanny-pack, sunburnt knees, cell phone strapped firmly to belt.

Could one enjoy liner travel without fitting into this social substratum? My family had cruised before, most recently when I was a freshman in college, but we aren't cruisers. I don't remember much from that trip, aside from getting seasick on the way home and holing up in my windowless cabin for a full day. Also, there's an image of my mother sporting a balloon animal penis on her head after a trip to Señor Frog's. (So maybe we have a touch of cruiser in us.)

Currently, the local cruise industry is booming. In 2010, Cruiseport Boston invested $11 million in a renovation of the Black Falcon Cruise Terminal to attract new business. This season, 350,000 passengers will sail out of Boston on more than 100 different ships from lines like Carnival, Norwegian, Royal Caribbean and Holland America Line. Most of them are headed to Canada or, like me, to Bermuda, but a few ships travel as far as Argentina for longer, repositioning journeys at the end of the season.

This, coupled with the fact that the Norwegian Dawn completed a multi-million dollar refurbishment in 2011, offered reassurance that I wouldn't be lost in a Bermuda Triangle of elastic waistband shorts. I'd also read on Wikipedia that Kim Cattrall had christened the ship prior to its maiden voyage in 2002. I still love Sex and the City, even after the Abu Dhabi debacle of the second film. So I enlisted my friend Melissa, a New Yorker, as a traveling companion, because she's boozy and can make friends with anyone. Together we would infiltrate this society of frozen drink aficionados and find out what it takes to join them. Or if it's worth it.

"Just remember you're never going to see any of these people again. You have to go for it."

The first thing we learned was that the journey begins with a petite Asian woman offering a spritz of hand sanitizer with the customary NCL greeting: "Happy, happy! Washy, washy!" This continues for the rest of your trip. It's NCL's attempt to prevent the Dawn from turning into a floating petri dish. It's also not optional. Melissa tried to decline a spray once, explaining her fear of super-bacteria, and was forcibly disinfected.

Viruses aside, a cruise ship is really just a smaller scale, floating Las Vegas.

The clientele is eerily similar. At 24, I felt like a newborn. For a moment, I wondered if I'd judged the crowd prematurely, and a bit too harshly, since most of the travelers didn't appear to be QVC-addicts. They looked like average folk out for a good time. And then, at the shiny bar in the atrium, amidst throngs of people waiting to check into their rooms, a drunk woman in a tube top spilled her frozen mudslide and remarked how it looked like diarrhea.

The glitz of Sin City is also echoed in the ship's spirited décor. Seashell and seahorse motifs abound, and staterooms are decked in a vibrant, if very literal, blue carpet. It's important to note that rooms with balconies are a status symbol amongst cruisers. Throughout your trip you'll hear regulars brag, "We always get the balcony. Is there any other way?"

Another, perplexing, theme is the Towel Animal. Each evening on our return to our cabin, there was some adorable, terry cloth origami creature wearing my sunglasses, hanging from the ceiling, or clipped by the paw to a hanger. This is such a defining element of a cruise that we attended a class on how to recreate the absorbent beasts. The class is a hot ticket for committed cruisers. I like to imagine that most of the attendees go home to populate their bathrooms with white terry chimpanzees, lobsters and elephants. One girl cried to her mother that she wanted the entire demo captured on DVD, so she could perfect the art. I sacrificed my koala after rinsing a dose of disinfectant off my hands.

Art isn't limited to plush origami. On our quest to find photographic proof that Samantha Jones had once teetered down the hallowed halls of the Dawn, Melissa and I found paintings signed by the likes of Picasso, Tarkay and Max. Questioning their authenticity, we went to one of the on-board art auctions. (Yes, there are floating art auctions.) Some pieces were valued at well over $100,000, which, weirdly, makes sense. You have a captive audience, many of whom are close to the age where they expect to shuffle off this mortal coil. And they love towel animals. Show them a Rembrandt etching, and the effect is miraculous. Show them a Thomas Kinkade and offer an interest-free payment plan, and they're sold.

The Dawn's crew made a heroic attempt to keep people stimulated—the most popular act being comedy from cruise director Paul Scally, a British stand-up who once voiced the Geico gecko, and who was the ship's A-list celebrity by week's end. None of the other acts had a comparable draw, including "the Electrifying Daniela," who hung from the ceiling while spinning some 30 hula-hoops in a show called Extreme Vegas. Oddly, the real dangers of Vegas were several floors up, at the buffet.

Buffets, the staple of Sin City, meet their apotheosis in a cruise ship. Finicky cruisers, however, know to skip the Garden Café (actually a buffet) altogether, and eat at one of the other dining rooms. The Café got a heavy facelift during last year's revamp, but I found its food pale in comparison to what was offered at the "specialty" restaurants. These spots, with strip mall names like Bamboo (Asian), La Cucina (Italian) or Cagney's (a steakhouse), cost a nominal cover charge. Le Bistro (you guessed it! French) may never be L'Espalier, but there's a real satisfaction that comes from not having to watch two people who look like the human globs in Wall-E fight over a piece of fried chicken.

At one point during our trip, Melissa commented that a cruise vacation is just like summer camp, only with booze. Summer camp was never my thing—I swapped bug bites for theater lessons at age five. After my trip to Bermuda, I can confirm that I'm not a cruiser. But I can also say that I'm envious of the way that most of the people onboard were able to unbuckle their constraints. It was tacky, yes. Occasionally ridiculous, sure. But it was thoroughly relaxing. Early on, a crewmember from New Zealand, advised, "Just remember you're never going to see any of these people again. You have to just go for it, it's funnier that way."

He had a point. There's a joy that comes from watching a frumpy couple, celebrating their 40th wedding anniversary by playing the onboard Newlywed Game, recall the craziest place they've ever had sex. Or witnessing the ladies of UMass, class of 1957, discover that they can still dance. There may not be cruisers at Canyon Ranch, but I'm willing to bet there isn't as much laughter, either.

In the end, we did eventually find the photos of Kim Cattrall. They're on the wall, near the entrance to the Pearly Kings Pub. She looks fabulous, and her smile, while Botoxed, looks genuine. ×××

PICK YOUR OWN IMPROPER ADVENTURE

As you enjoy your dessert, a passing celebrity chef applauds you for your plucky selection of meat as a condiment. "You've got class," he says, displaying his collection of barnyard animal tattoos. Emboldened, you write a memoir about your rural childhood and the true meaning of farm-to-table, sprinkled with folksy recipes and wisdom about the spiritual connection between human beings and the land. It reaches number six on the New York Times Non-Fiction Best-Seller List and you appear on Martha. This opens unexpected opportunities, leading you to accept a job in the press office of agricultural conglomerate Monsanto. At first you think to change the industrial food system from within, but you soon lose sight of your ideals as you become accustomed to your comfortable rounds of hotel suites, town cars and cocktail parties. Years later, a disheveled, crapulous figure reels up to you in a bar. It's Snouts, the beloved Yorkshire pig who shared your childhood adventures, and who was, perhaps, your one, true friend. "What happened to you?" he grunts through his tears. "What happened to us?"

"I changed!" you snap, your voice quavering. "I grew up!"

"Is that what you call this?" says Snouts. "Or did you just surrender?"

You wipe a single tear from your eye as the pig turns and walks through the door. He never once looks back. But now, you find, that's all you ever do. THE END

HOLE IN ONE

DO POSSESSIONS reflect the personality of their owners? That's one of the questions posed by Annie Leibovitz in her exhibit Pilgrimage at the Concord Museum. Rather than solely pointing the lens at her subjects, the best-known portrait photographer of our era captures identities through images of objects like Freud's couch, Louisa May Alcott's dolls and Annie Oakley's heart-shaped target (pictured). Landscapes also come to life, such as in Leibovitz's shots of Niagara Falls and the battlefield at Gettysburg. You can view the 70 photographs on display when the exhibit opens on June 28, making a pilgrimage to Concord a must. ALEXIS CHENEY Pilgrimage opens on June 28 at the Concord Museum, 53 Cambridge Turnpike, Concord (978-369-9763) concordmuseum.org.

Dancing Queens

It's All Greek to Me

Abba's music is as polarizing as it is infectious. Some folk can't stand the Swede-pop disco that's endured the test of time. The rest of us will pile into the Boston Opera House when Mamma Mia! takes the stage through June 24. With a soundtrack more sugary than baklava, the musical tells the tale of a young bride scheming to find her father on the eve of her wedding on a Greek island. It's the best way to hit the Mediterranean this summer without the expense of airfare.

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set-pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast, allowing them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Battleship ★ Ladies and gentlemen, this is the reductio ad absurdum of summer blockbusters, and not just because it's based on a board game. Consisting of spare parts from Independence Day, Top Gun, Transformers and Armageddon, it makes you wonder why Hollywood didn't try ripping off a good action film for a change. I don't even feel comfortable calling this a movie. Director Peter Berg, a gifted filmmaker responsible for Friday Night Lights on both the large and small screens, as well as nifty little B-pictures like The Rundown and The Kingdom, obviously set out to make the dumbest popcorn flick possible. Battleship is so far beyond pandering, it's impossible not to feel like you're in the presence of smart people who think you're an idiot. And where does the most flag-waving military recruitment film this side of a Michael Bay propaganda picture get the nerve to end with Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Fortunate Son"? (In the suburbs.)

Bel Ami ★ ½ This stuffy adaptation of Guy de Maupassant's novel relies on the extremely limited charms of Robert Pattinson, who stars here as a debauched war vet humping his way to the top of the social ladder in belle époque Paris. Typecast as an attractive young man without a single thought in his head, Pattinson beds down with a trifecta of faded starlets who would've made this movie a must-see in the '90s. First, he catches the eye of Uma Thurman's proto-feminist political crusader, until she pawns him off for strategic purposes on Christina Ricci's needy puppy dog. There's a brief interlude with Kristin Scott Thomas' desperate housewife, while all the men grumble about a war in the works. Directors Declan Donnellan and Nick Ormerod stuck strictly to the Merchant-Ivory playbook, steering disappointingly clear of the material's inherent camp. Bel Ami is bogged down with bland performances, a murky color palette and some extremely unflattering angles on actresses who used to be knockouts. Team Jacob. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Throw the Book at You

A Novel Idea

Even as you're anticipating Anchorman 2, there's no arguing that Will Ferrell's career is one of peaks and valleys. Did you see Casa de Mi Padre? Yeah, neither did we. On June 20, the Boston Public Library North End returns to a high point with a screening of 2006's Stranger Than Fiction, one of the comedian's first stabs at dramedy. Dustin Hoffman and Maggie Gyllenhaal join Ferrell in this story about a man who begins to hear a voice chronicling the events of his life. Too bad the narrator didn't tell him to stay away from Land of the Lost. Alexandra McSweeney

Bernie ★★ Director Richard Linklater adapts the true story of a gay, small-town Texas funeral director (Jack Black) with a penchant for stepping out with elderly widows. Shirley MacLaine hams it up to addled effect as a mean old lady, and Linklater pads out this murder tale with testimonials from actual residents of Carthage, Texas. It's half-documentary, half-feature, meaning that every time Linklater and cowriter Skip Hollandsworth don't feel like writing a scene, they can fall back on eyewitnesses to do the work for them. Kudos to Matthew McConaughey for eschewing his usual shirtless vanity in order to play a self-promoting lawman in rimless glasses and a silly hat. The movie is neither fish nor fowl, rife with easy shortcuts and outsized performances. Black's appeal continues to elude me, but Bernie could've been either a chilling documentary or a terrific character study. As is, it's neither. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Dark Shadows ★★★ ½ I'm exhausted by the constant collaborations between Johnny Depp and Tim Burton, which too often find them putting a homogenized stamp of pale makeup and self-conscious quirk on preexisting properties like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory or (heaven help us) Alice in Wonderland. But in adapting this weirdo 1960s serial, these two have hit a sweet spot they've been consistently missing for almost 20 years. Genuinely odd, with a half-kidding tone, the film follows Depp's 16th-century vampire, cursed for all eternity by a spurned lover (the magnificent Eva Green) only to be unearthed in 1972. It's a visual feast, with sumptuous gothic production design occasionally offset by tacky DayGlo colors. Popping with invention and a prankish, kinky sense of humor, the movie's soap-opera plotting dovetails nicely with Burton's career-long inability to tell a coherent story. Luxuriating in bizarre set-pieces and bloody asides, Dark Shadows is an extremely strange film, but it feels personal and particular. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Dictator ★ ½ For starters, even the beard looks phony. Sacha Baron Cohen, the comic genius behind Borat and Da Ali G Show, forgoes his usual guerilla pranks for safe, scripted folly. The first narrative he's attempted since 2002's woebegone Ali G Indahouse, The Dictator stars Baron Cohen as General Admiral Aladeen, the despot of an oil-rich North African country named Wadiya. He's an ignorant, petulant child suffering from the egomania typical of a dictator. After a promising start, the stupid plot kicks in, with Aladeen ambushed on a trip to the United Nations and replaced with a double. Broke and adrift in lower Manhattan, he falls in love with a hippy-dippy vegan (Anna Faris) and suffers every tired fish-out-of-water scenario you'd expect from a Mike Myers movie. The thrill of Da Ali G Show or Borat was watching Baron Cohen insinuate his outrageous caricatures into deadly serious surroundings. The Dictator has no such nerve, existing in an alternate cartoon reality where his satire doesn't sting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games ★½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Somerville Theatre.)

Hysteria ★ ½ A farce purporting to show how the invention of the vibrator rocked Victorian England, director Tanya Wexler's tract is instead one of those annoying period pieces in which characters stand around mocking the conventional wisdom of a particular time and congratulating viewers for being so forward thinking. Hugh Dancy stars as a young doctor fired from most medical establishments because he believes in germ theory and refuses to march around the operating room with dog crap on his shoes. Eventually he finds himself in the employ of Dr. Robert Dalrymple (Jonathan Pryce), who spends hours digitally stimulating housewives claiming to suffer from "hyperactive uteruses," when really they're just horny. There's material for a grand satire here, but Hysteria is devoted to proselytizing. Maggie Gyllenhaal's spunky suffragette hectors the audience about women's rights, so we can all pat ourselves on the back and acknowledge just how far we've, ahem, come. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Men in Black 3 ★ ½ A decade late, this lumbering $215 million behemoth stumbles into theaters punch-drunk, top-heavy and sweating so hard it's all but barren of laughs. Accounting for the monumental indifference of Tommy Lee Jones, Will Smith reportedly came up with the idea for a time-traveling villain to murder Jones' Agent K back in 1969, sending Big Willie on a Terminator-style mission to a groovier era to save his partner (well-impersonated by Josh Brolin). Don't worry about all the alternate time-line paradoxes that would obviously ensue, because the multiple screenwriters didn't bother. There's a bit of lip service about how a man of Smith's complexion might have a tough time in that tumultuous era, a potentially interesting conceit from which the picture retreats. Men in Black 3 started shooting back in September 2010 without a finished script, and now that all the reshoots, red herrings and character backgrounds have been patched together, it doesn't make a lick of sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Boston Common and Coolidge Corner.)

Benjamin Kasulke

Prometheus ★★ Director Ridley Scott's space odyssey attempts to rework remnants of his 1979 masterpiece Alien by ditching the blue-collar reality and lean screenwriting in favor of enough gaseous philosophizing about the origin of the species to fuel a dorm-room bong session. Alas, we're back in Chariots of the Gods territory, with extraterrestrial thugs foiling creationism while a band of scientists follow clues from some ancient cave paintings to a distant planet, hoping to meet our makers. From moment to moment, Prometheus is gorgeous. The best-looking stupid movie I've seen in years, the film is a triumph of production design but a disaster in screenwriting. Starting with Noomi Rapace's Christian Darwinist (hello, contradictions), these characters refuse to abide by any sort of logic. There's a nifty performance by Michael Fassbender as an android obsessed with Lawrence of Arabia, but most of his actions remain inexplicable. It's more like a trailer for the inevitable sequels. In space, no one can hear you groan. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Safety Not Guaranteed ★★ Aubrey Plaza's disdain gets such a workout every week on Parks and Recreation that she's become the poster girl for scorn made sexy. Finally given her own vehicle, Plaza does her best to carry a wheezy collection of Sundance stereotypes on her shoulders, but Safety Not Guaranteed is one of those half-finished films that plays better at festivals. As an intern for a trendy magazine, Plaza finds herself investigating a classified ad placed by a purported time-traveler who's really just a mentally ill dollar-store clerk. Subject to the whims of her hedonistic boss (a very funny Jake M. Johnson), Plaza's character cozies up with this adorable crackpot and the love story blooms in time with some acoustic guitar montages. Produced by indie poster boys Jay and Mark Duplass, Safety Not Guaranteed suffers from their trademark twee music cues, garbage cinematography and tiny wisp of a script. Plaza can carry a movie, just not this one. (At Kendall Square.)

Crash and Burn

A Cautionary Tale

Aubrey Plaza's transition from TV to film star falls flat in Safety Not Guaranteed.

Snow White and the Huntsman ★½ That mirror on the wall Charlize Theron keeps consulting is obviously broken, because it keeps telling her that Kristen Stewart's Snow White is the fairest of them all. More fair than Charlize Theron? Yeah, right. This year's second reworking of the Grimm fairy tale plunges into Lord of the Rings territory, with director Rupert Sanders shoplifting images and a self-serious tone from every swords-and-CGI opus from the past few years. Theron vamps it up to late-career Faye Dunaway levels as the wicked queen, while Chris Hemsworth aches in the background as the titular huntsman, pining away with little to do besides lend the movie a Twilight-style love triangle. Things get really weird when a spate of Britain's finest character actors (Ian McShane, Ray Winstone, Bob Hoskins, etc.) find their heads grafted onto tiny bodies as Snow White's dwarf sidekicks, but the movie remains inert as Stewart's slouchy, disinterested performance. She looks as bored as I felt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Take This Waltz ★★★ ½ The marginalization of movie theaters continues with Magnolia Pictures releasing titles via Video on Demand upwards of a month prior to theatrical release. This is a thorny issue, but however one chooses to see Sarah Polley's heartfelt sophomore directorial effort, it's a film worth watching.

Ricardo Vaz Palma

Michelle Williams stars as a happy housewife settled into a routine with her hubby of five years, played with affable obliviousness by Seth Rogen. But everything ruptures once she meets their new neighbor (Luke Kirby), a shy artist who trots around in a rickshaw and secretly yearns for the married lady across the street. Keenly sensitive to the inconvenience of desire, Polley (who also wrote the screenplay) dances around their tentative courtship, with the couple increasingly weighed down by the knowledge that their happiness will only result in misery for others. A couple of misjudged surreal flourishes muck up the movie's lived-in rhythm, but is there a subtler, more emotionally transparent actress than Williams working today? Her silences speak volumes. (Now available via Video on Demand, coming to theaters in July.)

Shaking Things Up

Go Time

Hair Today The members of Motion City Soundtrack have created a catchy punk sound that's become a favorite of summer festival-goers. Occupying a space between pop, rock and punk, the group often shares stages with acts like Blink 182, Fall Out Boy, Incubus and Panic at the Disco. Frontman Justin Pierre's lyrics take a page from the songbooks of Ben Folds and Tom Waits, but the band spins the words into high octane anthems. Hear tunes from their latest album, Go, at the Middle East Downstairs on June 30. Alexis Cheney

PICK YOUR OWN IMPROPER ADVENTURE

The summer sky is brilliant and clear, the color of an irradiated robin's egg. You feel fresh purpose as you stride, bare-legged, through the Public Garden. Just then your eye alights on a dastardly scene: A man, possibly a vampire, is leaning over a bed of hydrangeas. Against all decency and signage, he appears poised to pluck one.

TOP OF THE POPS

Live and Learn

The Boston Pops opened their season with the usual bang, as snappy, crackling conductor Keith Lockhart welcomed chanteuse Maggie Scott (whose first and last appearance at Symphony Hall was 61 years ago) and the incomparable Bernadette Peters to the stage.

"I'm the world's biggest Bernadette Peters fan," said one woman, which prompted a friend to say, "Actually, I'll bet the world's biggest Bernadette Peters fan is that guy wearing a boa and married to the man on his left."

Indubitably, the house was packed with show-tune-loving queens and Broadway babies, as well as the likes of gardening guru Hilda Morrill and the ever affable Ron, Lockhart's parents, Newton Frederick and Marilyn Jean, his wife, Emiley, broadcasting giant Ron della Chiesa and the edible Joyce, radiant brunette Lisa Pierpont, confidant to the rich and famous Jayme Fink and her other half, Rich Norton, capital management maven Stephen Neumeier, and so on and so forth.

As always, the cheese and charcuterie platters were devoured before the concert, and as always, the crack wait staff managed to serve Champagne and cocktails throughout the concert without disturbing anyone.

Meanwhile, the evening's second most amusing remark came from the man who said, "I have a friend who got her husband at the Wellesley dump."

First prize went to the woman who responded to a comment about women pretending to be lesbians to arouse men: "Please. That's how I got through college. I learned very quickly that if I walked into a bar and made out with my roommate, drinks were on the house for the rest of the night."

Please Pass the Lydocaine

Project Runway has nuthin' on Mass Art, which hosted a style extravaganza at the Revere Hotel's Space 57 to highlight the school's fashion students' ingenuity, vision and creativity.

Like most fashion shows, nothing happened on time, and everyone (with the exception of parents) adopted an air of total bitchery. Unlike at most fashion shows, there were dresses made of newspaper and acoustical tiles, and the shoes were, generally speaking, ghastly. However, it all made for a highly entertaining evening.

Some of the choicest comments:

"That's a dress only a drag queen could love."

"Love the sci-fi geisha look!"

"That outfit screams lunch at your parents' house in Greenwich."

"My dog would attack that."

"It's made of sponges. Just add water and you've got a ball gown."

"It's very pretty, but I'm scared of anyone who could make a dress out of tampons."

And, "Since when was traction sexy?"

However, the evening's undeniable highlight came when everyone poured out of the doors just as a guy in a white Maserati bottomed out on the speed bump in front of the theater.

Amid all the laughter, one voice could be heard saying, "Damn! His penis substitute just got ground into the cement!"

What Would Bishop Desmond Do?

Everything's beautiful at the ballet, and it's not too shabby offstage, either. The Young Partners of the Boston Ballet hosted Le Soiree de Printemps at the Taj Hotel, and there's plenty to be said for a party where a lot of the women could convincingly play swans, a bunch of the men could crack walnuts with their buttcheeks and everyone got hot and sweaty on the dance floor.

The crowd included the likes of cochairs Jessica and Daniel Schmitz, flawless prima Kathleen Combes, the newly engaged Joanna Humphrey and her intended, Bryan ("Giggity-giggity") Flynn, departing star James Whiteside (Boston's loss is New York's gain), gamine fashion plate Liana Krupp and her music-producer-turned-restaurateur husband, Michael, the gorgeously pregnant Tonya Chen Mezrich and her best-seller factory of a husband, Ben, and all the other fun, good-looking people in Boston.

And if you think the end of Swan Lake is sad, you should've seen the middle-aged man wearing a tiara and trying to squeeze into a ballerina costume at the photo booth.

As a friend charitably put it: "Our people were not made to wear tutus." ×××

WE ASK YOU, DID OUR FOUNDING FATHERS BUILD THIS GREAT NATION ON TOFU?

NOT A CHANCE.

America was built on the kind of food we make here at Joe's American Bar & Grill. Real food, made from scratch, with the freshest ingredients.

Like the Joe's Original Burger, it's hand-ground chuck, over the topped with aged cheddar, blue or (of course) American cheese on a griddled poppy seed roll and accompanied by hand-cut fries. Feeling hungry for the classics, then come to Joe's.

Why go anywhere else?

The IMPROPER

The Best Yet

The first time I worked on The Improper's Boston's Best issue was in 1996. I was a flustered intern, and in exchange for an "additional reporting by..." byline I spent days filling in facts—collected largely by means of a "phone book"—about oafish politicians, the addresses of children's retailers and which now-forgotten athlete bent the Seventh Commandment at the Rack. This was a crash course in the zeitgeist of a world in which people were still excited about grande coffees. It was so long ago that the Clinton economy was on the verge of showering riches on anyone with a domain name and a stark misreading of Adam Smith.

Adam DeTour

Thank God we don't live in those times anymore. Good luck getting a house-made charcuterie plate in the '90s, or a gay marriage. There were bran muffins everywhere. Alanis Morrisette screwed up everyone's definition of irony. Reality TV was still in its paleo, MTV stage. We were truly benighted.

That's why we publish this, our annual Boston's Best issue. Times change. What was last year considered the definition of the perfect sausage may now, thanks to a shift in the fashion for meat slurry, seem like a load of tripe. These things need vigorous updating.

Raw physical beauty, however, is perennial, as proven by Maria Menounos, who last graced our cover in 2007. She looks far more dazzling today.

Party Time

STEEPED IN HISTORY

IN THE 11 YEARS since a fire ravaged the Boston Tea Party Ships & Museum, many locals forgot the institution ever existed. The long-delayed and massively overhauled landmark on Atlantic Wharf relaunches this summer as a floating tribute to the historic act of vandalism, complete with a tea chest pulled from the depths of Boston Harbor, state-of-the-art hologram technology and re-enactments. "We're a museum of experience and authenticity," says executive director Shawn P. Ford. "When you come in, with our actors portraying the roles of iconic patriots, you believe that you've stepped back into time." KYLE WRIGHT

Good Eats

Duck Hunt

Most local Thai menus offer only chicken larb. Even at Thai North you'll have to consult the blackboard to find a version made with duck. This gamier iteration of the country's famous spicy-sour salad is grouped separately, with other traditional dishes—a list that makes the Oak Square outpost more than just another pad Thai factory. Their larb is also hotter and more vibrant, with a generous measure of chilies, lime juice and fish sauce to balance the rich minced duck. Temper the burn with a mouthful of the accompanying black-and-white sticky rice, or guzzle a Thai iced tea. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Beauty

In a Roe

Textured "caviar" manicures make summer outfits look straight off the runway. All-in-one kits are available at Sephora, but technician Amanda Skinner of Wellesley's Bella Santé offers steps for DIY-ing the look using microbeads (found in the scrapbooking section of any craft store). LINDSEY CANANT

1. Apply a solid base coat similar to the color of the microbeads you'll be using. Let dry completely.

2. On one nail, apply a second coat in the same color.

3. Pour microbeads across the wet nail and gently press them into the polish. Repeat as necessary to fill in gaps.

4. Let dry, then dot a clear top coat along the edge of the nail to help beads stay in place.

Try the treatment on an accent nail or go crazy and do all 10. To remove, soak a cotton ball in nail-polish remover and apply for 30 seconds. Hands down, it's an easy look to master.

FARM FLING

An au naturel dinner series

IN WILL GILSON, CHRIS Coombs and Andy Husbands' respective kitchens, farm-to-table isn't trendy, it's standard practice. But what about bringing the table to the farm? These three are just a few of the chefs trekking north on Wednesdays to prepare three-course menus during Smolak Farms' Whim dinner series. The "seasonal restaurant" uses the lush surroundings as a dining room, and a portion of the proceeds benefit the chefs' charity of choice. Diners are also treated to outdoorsy activities like a hayride, farm tour and bonfire.

AT THE FORTHCOMING BREWER'S Coalition in Newtonville, even food that doesn't include beer as an ingredient is designed to pair with the 20 monthly rotating draft lines and 30 brews by the bottle. Proprietor Bill Honeycutt, who also owns the John Brewer's Taverns in Malden and Waltham, is proud that the Buffalo wings have earned a cult following, but seems most excited for the beer-battered steak. Expect the space, decked in his personal collection of brew memorabilia, to open in early August.

BIG NIGHT ENTERTAINMENT GROUP is thinking very big indeed with the newly opened Empire Asian Restaurant & Lounge. The 14,000-square-foot sibling to Gem, the Scorpion Bar and Tosca continues the Asian trend that Ed and Joe Kane, Randy Greenstein and chef Kevin Long have pursued at Red Lantern and Shrine. The behemoth boasts seating for more than 350, with three private dining rooms that can be combined into one, plus an "Imperial Dining Room," a lounge, a bar, a gallery, a salon and a sushi bar.

AMERICAN BEAUTY

Bill Brodsky spent a decade wowing a discerning clientele with haute cuisine and superb service at the luxe Wequassett Resort and Golf Club on Cape Cod. With the launch of City Landing in the newly named Wharf District, he's eying a more diverse demographic, but keeping hospitality tops. "The goal is to present the highest level of food at the right price point. This is not fine dining," he says. "This is quality in a casual setting."

"THIS IS QUALITY IN A CASUAL SETTING."

Drawn to the neighborhood by the Rose F. Kennedy Greenway and countless condo developments, Brodsky's taken over the original Sel de la Terre space, which shuttered in May. Thanks to renovations led by Storyville and Gallows designer Stephen Sousa, it's hardly recognizable. "When you came in before, it was this warm, comfortable brasserie, but it didn't have any energy," says Brodsky. "Now you've got these beautiful views of the Greenway and tons of light." Pops of apple green contrast with taupes and chocolate browns to make the atmosphere more modern, mimicking the feel of the bustling neighborhood.

Modernity is echoed in the menu. Brodsky describes his cuisine as "contemporary American," and he embraces the idea of a melting pot. Pizzettas will undoubtedly be popular choices at the new 11-seat bar or at one of the communal tables, but fusion is best evidenced in dishes like a mozzarella and tomato salad, fancied up by tempura asparagus for crunch. Tourists trying to escape the nearby Quincy Market traps can still sink into mini lobster rolls, although Brodsky's version swaps hot dog buns for Portuguese sweet bread. "I like to say that 70 percent of my menu is adventurous, 20 percent of it is specifically designed for the foodie, and 10 percent is for people who don't care about the fluff," he says. "But that doesn't mean you can be lazy with that 10 percent." KYLE WRIGHT

THE NEXT STEPS

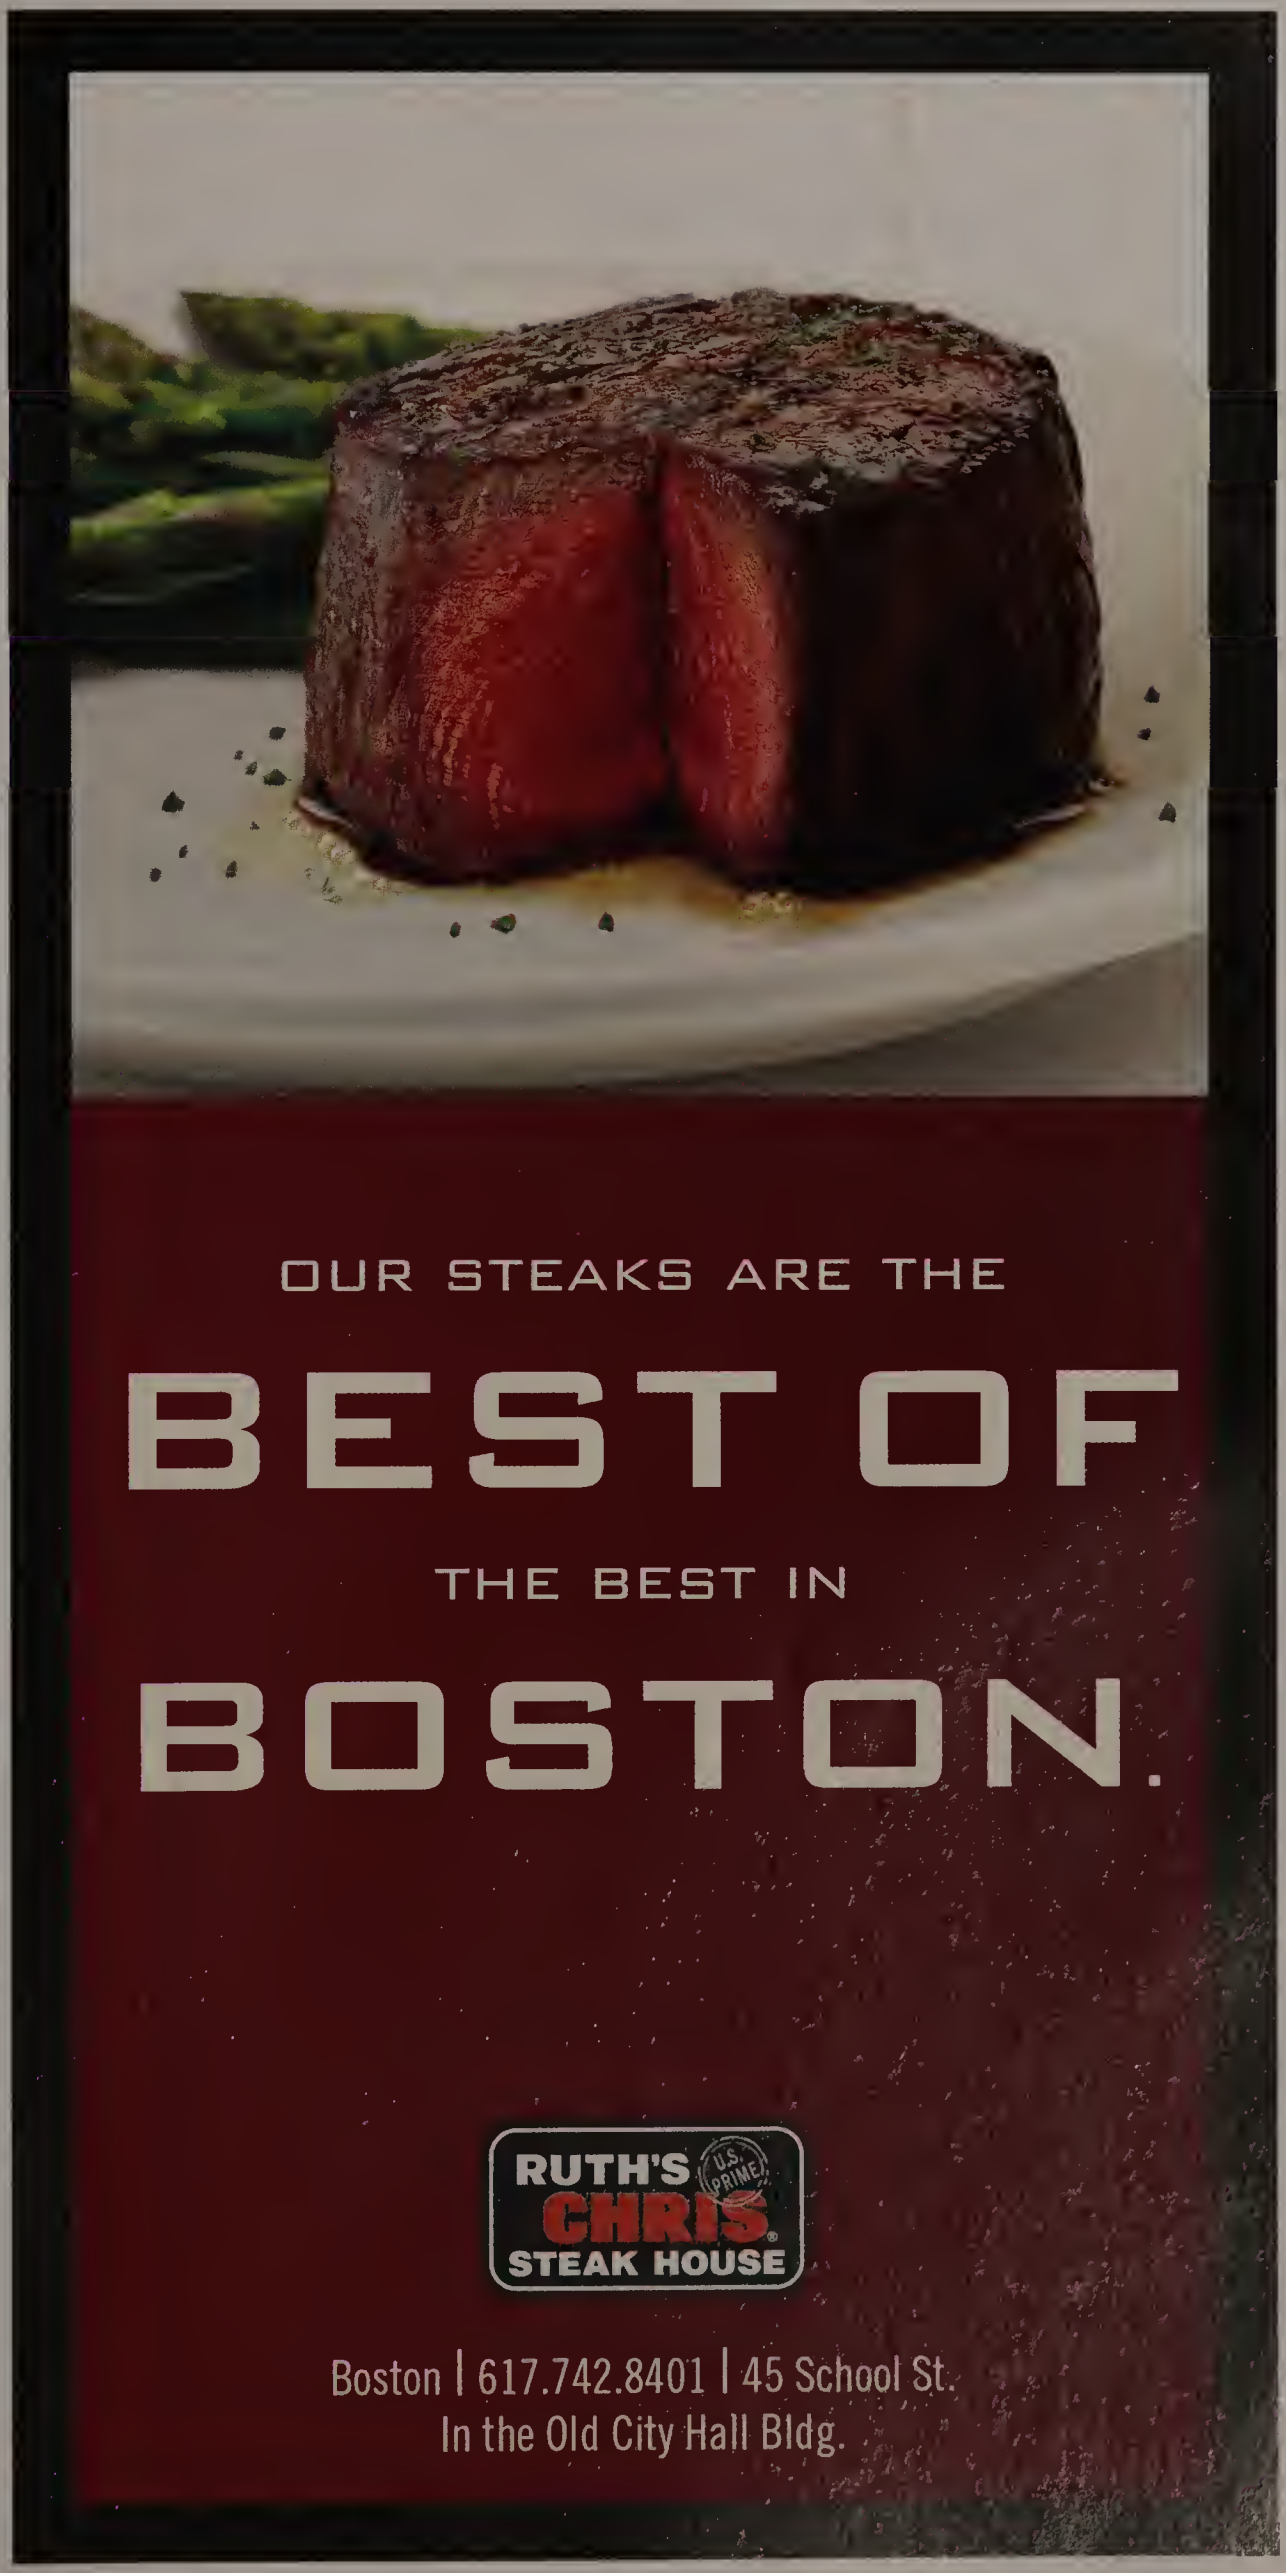
Thirteen-year-old Sharon, Mass., native Noah Parets stars in Billy Elliot the Musical at the Boston Opera House, July 24–Aug. 19.

You've been dancing since you were seven, but the singing is new. How's that going?
I've always liked to sing, but it's a lot newer to me than dancing. There hasn't really been too much pressure, but I'm getting used to it.

What advice did your teachers give you?
Every person said to have the time of my life and just have fun.

Do you have a favorite kind of dance?
I really like ballet and tap. Those are the ones that we do the most in the show. I like ballet because there's always something that I can reach for or learn. There's a set of rules, so I always know what I should be doing, and that helps me get better.

Are there any cities you're particularly excited to visit on the tour?
Boston, of course, because all of my family and friends can come see me, but I haven't really seen any of the middle part of the country, so I'm excited to just go anywhere and explore.



What made you want to start dancing?
I was always jumping and turning around in my house, and then I saw the movie Happy Feet, and I tried to follow the penguins and was always tapping because of it. Eventually my mom signed me up for dance class.

Would you say that you're having the coolest summer vacation of all your friends?
Yeah, that's probably safe to say. KYLE WRIGHT

Making the Cut

The idea is such a no-brainer, it's a wonder it took 73 years to take off. Ron Savenor and his crew at the butcher's original Cambridge storefront are now taking some of their top cuts, accessorizing them with house-made fixin's, and sandwiching them between slices of local bread. Grab one of the pre-assembled combinations, or wait for a made-to-order Havana—an upmarket take on the griddled Cubano. Or try the Toulouse, which overflows with duck confit, pickled vegetables, sautéed cabbage and pancetta. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Drinks of the Moment

FLAG DAZE Patriotic packaging, compared

← Budweiser SIX-PACK, CANS

NATIONALISM: 8/10. A couple of points off for being made out of rice instead of apple pie and mothers.

TASTES LIKE: Carbonated tap water, with a fizzy nose and a whiff of NASCAR exhaust fumes.

IDEAL FOR: Chugging, then belching out the first bar of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

PAIR IT WITH: Seasonal breakfast cereals. Also: wings, pizza.

↓ Samuel Adams Boston Lager 12-PACK, BOTTLES

NATIONALISM: 5/10. Points deducted for lazily packing a flag-themed box full of regular bottles with a mere ring of bunting around the necks to make them look patriotic. Points back for being named after a successful political insurgent.

TASTES LIKE: A Vienna lager, with floral and citrus notes from the Noble hops. Enjoyed best from a pewter mug.

IDEAL FOR: Quaffing, then musing on the stark financial motives underpinning the colonies' rebellion against the Crown.

HEEL OVER

TO THE BLONDE AND BRUNETTE ON THE RED LINE EFFECTIVELY IGNORING THE SUBTLE THROAT-CLEARING OF THE CROTCHETY YOUNG MAN SEATED OPPOSITE THEM: I know, I know. You're wondering, "How did a 20-something gentleman come to describe himself as crotchety?" 'Twas a long journey, my chatty friends. It began at Park Street five minutes earlier when I stepped onto the train and heard you two arguing about whether a wedge is, in fact, a heel. That is, whether heel is an umbrella term under which the designation of wedge resides. The triviality of this conversation aside, privilege dripping from each word like the wax from a $40 Anthropologie candle, yes, for god's sake, a wedge is a type of heel. The aforementioned Scrooge

I have a serious question:

Why do seriously overweight or obese people insist on wearing form-fitting clothes? Spare the rest of us. There are plenty of flowy, figure-flattering options that don't show every lump, bump and muffin top! Please. Grossed-out

To the orange cockroach on the Red Line:

I live in the city for a reason—I hate insects like you. When I witnessed you haphazardly scamper across the car's floor, I thought for sure you were some kind of diseased rat. If I hadn't been in shock, I would've screamed. As it is, I got off at the next stop and almost missed my hair appointment. For heaven's sake, scarf down your beloved orange Cheetos, carrots and Easy Mac elsewhere. More importantly, if you are going to be a wacky color, at least match the subway line. Bugged city girl

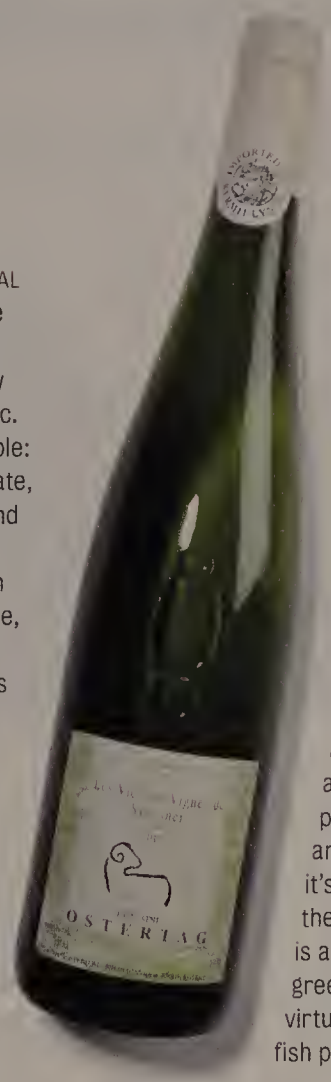
Wine



Alsace Array

When debating the best summer whites, Alsace should be part of the discussion. The minerality and crisp flavors of the region's finest can create a stunning synergy with lighter seasonal fare. This terrain in northern France has a cool, dry climate that enables winemakers to extend the harvest for several weeks, which develops ripeness and appealing fruit nuances along with pinpoint acidity. If you appreciate structure, understatement and a lingering finish in your whites, pop the tops on the following delicious options.

* MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

* Lucien Albrecht "Cuvée Balthazar" Pinot Blanc, 2010 ($15, CENTRAL BOTTLE) Any Alsace tasting must start with a gentle, softly textured pinot blanc. This is a fine example: creamy on the palate, with herb, apple and subtle apricot aromas paired with crisp flavors. Supple, with delicate spice, this pinot epitomizes the region's use of yeast lees aging. Due to 2010's unusual weather patterns (reducing the size of the crop substantially), this vintage is more concentrated than usual, making for a fine aperitif.

* Domaine Ostertag "Les Vieilles Vignes" Sylvaner, 2010 ($30, BALL SQUARE FINE WINES) Here's a wine you absolutely have to try, despite the sylvaner grape's (unwarranted) reputation for mediocrity. Ostertag's old-vine expression, the product of a strict, biodynamic grape-growing regimen, is absolutely brilliant. With aromas of lemon, asparagus, white pepper, anise and wet stone, it's electric on the palate. This is a stunner with green salads or virtually any light fish preparation.

* Trimbach Riesling, 2009 ($20, DOWNTOWN WINE & SPIRITS) Trimbach is a 12th-generation producer that makes all of its wines in a bone-dry, extra-crisp, almost steely style, and riesling is a specialty. From the ultra-ripe 2009 harvest, this wine is classically floral and bright. There are notes of green apple and grapefruit to complement its pure mineral intensity. Despite its leanness and fresh zesty character, this is a great wine for the cellar. Of course, you can enjoy it now, especially with cod or scallops.

TALKING THE TALK

Lessons in arguing constructively

"HOW RIGHT I AM. HOW wrong you are!" So go the underlying assumptions in many disagreements. And how common it is to hum sarcastically, only half-listening to the absurd position of the other, as we wait to trumpet our own certitude.

In its new, updated edition, Difficult Conversations offers ways to make disagreements and differences productive—in business or personal life. The authors propose considering three conversations: the "'What Happened?' Conversation," in which you review the actual script, including its distortions of intent and impact; the "Feelings Conversation," in which you explore the bubbling emotions that are expressed or hidden inside the disagreement; and the "Identity Conversation," which examines existential values and feelings that can unconsciously fuel disagreement.

Difficult Conversations: How to Discuss What Matters Most

by Douglas Stone, Bruce Patton and Sheila Heen of the Harvard Negotiation Project

A stance of curiosity is crucial: Antagonists need to permit a flow between each side in order to escape the rigid, prosecutor-defense dynamic and gain perspective. It's important, too, to name the core of each position from a higher place—in a respectful and balanced way—so as to minimize confusion. The book's mini-sections discuss, succinctly and subtly, the components of disagreements that can make them enlivening. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 91: "Most of us assume that knowing how we feel is no more complicated than knowing whether we are hot or cold. We just know. But in fact, we often don't know how we feel. Many of us know our own emotions about as well as we know a city we are visiting for the first time. We may recognize certain landmarks, but fail to understand the subtle rhythms of daily life; we can find the main boulevards, but remain oblivious to the tangle of back streets where the real action is."

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

Trying a slice of another life

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THIS ISN'T A COLUMN telling you to abandon your dreams. This is just a reminder that sometimes your dreams are dumb.

We all need hopes and aspirations. They guide us toward fulfillment. Without goals, we lose sight of the path ahead, and that forces us to look inward to ask the most terrifying question: What am I doing with my life? To cope with the stress, we spoon up some ice cream, or we visit our favorite restaurant. We experience joy through food, and sometimes we allow a meal to calm our existential crisis. This is how foodies are born. Humans are genetically designed to love eating. If you've taken the extra step to give that love a nickname, you need a secondary passion.

Then there's the final step, the culinary bridge too far: professional cooking. The world needs chefs, of course, so I don't mean to be haughty. Most of us have shared the same vocational fantasy, after all. But unless you're reading this column during your summer vacation, it's too late to find the level of success you're imagining. Let me remind you where the fantasy begins, should you try to make it a reality.

> To my happy customers, I hope you enjoyed your meal as much as I enjoyed desecrating it.

It's June 21, the first full day of summer. The mercury at Logan Airport reads 96 degrees, a record-breaking high. Where you want to be is in a bar, bathed in darkness and refrigerated air, your insides cooled by icy beer. Where you don't want to be is by that bar's oven.

Jason Santana, the chef at Silvertone Bar & Grill, has graciously allowed me into his kitchen to be low man on the totem pole. In return, I've promised not to be a liability, both in terms of efficiency and legality.

Got an opinion? Send your stories and suggestions to nick@improper.com.

At 5 pm, Santana has me chopping mirepoix for the shepherd's pie. I took a knife-skills class once, and ever since, I've been a little cocky about my ability to dice an onion. But a work environment is eons from the safe confines of an adult education center. It's 115 degrees in the kitchen, a delightful sensation compared to the evaluating gaze of my new boss. Ten minutes in and I've got a blister developing on my index finger and $1.50 worth of vegetables sunk into the holes of the kitchen mat. Santana decides I should assemble kebabs. I immediately stab my blister with a wooden skewer.

As service starts, I move to the grill, where my guide is Ronabel Freitas, a young man affectionately nicknamed "Taco Bell." The estimable Mr. Freitas broke his arm a while back. Five replacements in a row worked one shift and never came back for another. He's a full assembly line under a single hairnet.

Freitas stuck with the one-and-done approach to mentoring. He'd show me a recipe, and I was expected to execute. In the beginning, this set a flame under my nerves. Chicken wings require little more than nine minutes in hot oil, but I still found myself pacing around the fryer like an expectant father in a waiting room.

As the hours passed, I burned my knuckle, singed my arm hair and gradually developed some confidence. It got so I could handle four dishes at once without sweat and tears leaking into the Bolognese. I also learned the beauty of a well-done steak. To a foodie, if you order meat well-done you're a heathen. As a cook, you were my new best friend, as you gave me an order I didn't have to think about. "If it doesn't taste like cardboard, they'll send it back," Santana advised. To my happy customers, I hope you enjoyed your meal as much as I enjoyed desecrating it.

As the shift ended at 11 pm, I received the kitchen seal of approval: "Not bad for a white guy." Of course, the night was slow, with only about 90 covers in a restaurant that regularly clears 300. I was well-rested, while Santana had been working since 7 am, a 16-hour day not outside his normal routine. A career in the kitchen demands a genuine appetite for the grind. Just one night on the job had me sweaty, dirty, greasy and satisfied. But not wholly fulfilled. (Oddly, I didn't feel hungry afterward.)

Cooking is a profession of inventiveness, in which people should be inspired to create. I remain ever happy to eat the results of their labor. The food stains, however, belong on my desk, a place where I can express myself better. ×××

Q: WHAT ARE YOUR RECOMMENDATIONS FOR QUICK FIXES?

A: Great question. Here are my treatment suggestions for instant summer pick-me-ups:

Body Contouring. Who wouldn't like to lose an inch or two from their tummy now that swimsuit season is here? Talk about instant gratification! Bella Contour, our ultrasonic body contouring system, will melt away fat from your abdomen, thighs or upper arms. There is no downtime, no discomfort, and works well for men and women.

Facial fillers. Facial fillers such as Restylane, Juvederm and Radiesse will fill in and soften lines and wrinkles on the lower part of the face. You can also give your lips a little pouf. The results are immediate and you will look natural, yet rested and rejuvenated.

Summer Facials. In the summer our pores tend to get clogged due to heat and humidity, so it is important to have soothing facials to keep our skin clean, clear and healthy-looking. Clinical-grade facials are a quick fix to keep you looking your summer best!

Have a great summer, and don't forget to use one of SkinHealth's award winning sunscreens!

THE ITALIAN JOB

Woody Allen says "Ciao!" to another European locale.

To Rome With Love ★★½☆
Starring Alec Baldwin, Roberto Benigni, Penélope Cruz, Jesse Eisenberg, Alison Pill, Judy Davis and Woody Allen. Written and directed by Woody Allen. At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square Cinema and West Newton Cinema.

SOME STUDIO EXECUTIVE must have figured out that Woody Allen's films make more money when their titles reference glamorous foreign cities. After Vicky Cristina Barcelona and Midnight in Paris, you can't fault the logic. His European tour continues with To Rome With Love, which at previous points in its hasty production had been more adventurously titled Nero Fiddled and Bop Decameron.

No matter what it's called, To Rome With Love is endearing, second-tier Allen. Last summer's Midnight in Paris turned out to be his highest grossing picture of all time, but it also felt like something of a rebirth for the workhorse, at long last coming to a reckoning with his obsessions with the past. The first great picture Allen had made in almost 20 years, Midnight in Paris was profound in a deceptively breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind.

A mashup of four disconnected shorts, this picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk drawer and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces fashioned after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s. We open with a Fellini-esque traffic cop welcoming us to the metropolis, cheerfully ignoring an accident and chatting away. (At this point, some of us were already groaning in our seats, as Darius Khondji's sun-dappled cinematography was spoiled by frame-rate problems with the AMC Loews Boston Common 19's hideous digital projection. Be careful where you go to see this one, folks.)

> It's a kick to see the director on-screen again, kvetching and complaining in the way so many others have tried—and failed—to mimic.

In the first story, Allen steps in front of the camera for the first time in six years as the neurotic (surprise!) father of a WASPy bride-to-be (Alison Pill) who's hell-bent on marrying an Italian communist. It's a kick to see the director on-screen again, kvetching and complaining in the way so many others have tried—and failed—to mimic. Looking hearty at 76, his timing is slower and less anxious than it used to be. Still, when he unleashes a precisely crafted one-liner like, "I was never a communist—I can't share a bathroom," I wanted to burst into applause.

His story line is a silly one, which is saying something in a movie this frothy. A recently retired opera director chafing against his own obsolescence, Allen's character discovers that one of his future in-laws (tenor Fabio Armiliato) has the voice of an angel. Unfortunately the guy can only sing in the shower, which leads the audience down an entirely predictable but still hilarious path.

After a long post-Pinocchio stint in movie purgatory, Roberto Benigni returns to the screen as an average fellow catapulted to stardom for reasons that remain unclear. Sending up our you-don't-have-to-do-anything-to-become-famous culture, Benigni's boring clerk is hounded by paparazzi and news crews who demand to know what he ate for breakfast, hanging on every word. It's a sketch that works better in theory than in execution, and, like a lot of recent Allen conceits, it feels about two drafts away from completion. Ditto for the one-joke tale of a newlywed whose distant Roman relatives mistake a hooker (Penélope Cruz) for his bride, though there's something to be said for Allen's ability to wring every comic possibility from this simple misunderstanding. And I dare say his camera has never leered so openly as it does at Cruz and her curves.

But that's all fluff compared to the film's most focused tale, in which Alec Baldwin, playing an architect resigned to designing shopping malls, is befriended by his younger self (Jesse Eisenberg) on the eve of a life-changing romantic blowout in which he's tempted to cheat on his girlfriend (Greta Gerwig) with her flighty pal (Ellen Page). Calamitously miscast, Page's allegedly erotic neuroses feel like Diane Keaton by way of the Max Fischer Players. And anyone who thinks Eisenberg could grow up to be Baldwin needs a lesson in genetics. (What did this spindly Jewish kid do to age into a fat Irishman?)

Still, the story has teeth. Just imagine standing by as you watch yourself make the biggest mistake of your life. You're powerless to stop it, but eventually realize that even if given the opportunity to do things differently you'd still make the same damn mistakes. It's rueful, magical and classic Allen. ✖✖✖

WOODY'S WORLD

Guthrie Family Reunion and New Multitudes toast the centennial of a folk icon.

Guthrie Family Reunion plays the Green River Festival on July 14 and the Newport Folk Festival on July 28.

SARAH LEE GUTHRIE RECALLS touring Sweden last year with her husband, Johnny Irion, when they played at Woody West, a club named after her legendary grandfather. At that point, she says, their then–9-year-old daughter Olivia crossed her arms and piped, "I'm getting the feeling this Woody guy is pretty popular."

That feeling should spread this summer when their clan joins the Guthrie Family Reunion tour to celebrate what would've been Woody's 100th birthday on July 14. The group plays the Green River Festival, followed by a July 28 set at the Newport Folk Festival. Patriarch Arlo Guthrie, 64, will be singing his father's songs with a 14-member cavalcade that includes his son Abe, daughters Cathy, Annie and Sarah Lee, and their children.

"It becomes ridiculous at times, like 'How many Guthries are there? And they all play music!'" says Sarah Lee Guthrie, 33. She understands how it's a bit of an abstraction for Olivia, now 10, and her sister Sophia, four, to sing songs by their great-grandfather—or "Woody," as they've learned to know him. "It's kinda weird when you have someone like Woody as your grandfather that everybody knows as this iconic figure. It's hard to bring it into the personal without bringing some of that along, especially when you're a few generations removed and didn't know him."

> "It's kinda weird when you have someone iconic like Woody as your grandfather."

New generations, however, have boosted an awareness of Guthrie beyond his standard "This Land Is Your Land." Much of that began with Mermaid Avenue, a 1998 project in which Wilco and Billy Bragg wrote music to accompany lyrics from Guthrie's archives at the invitation of Arlo's sister Nora. Other artists, as well as family members, have done the same. Dropkick Murphys tapped Woody's lyrics for "I'm Shipping Up to Boston" and indie-rock supergroup New Multitudes, which hits Newport Folk the day after the Guthries, wove 12 songs from the archives into one of 2012's finest albums.

"It was kind of electric just to be there and look at that stuff," says New Multitudes' Anders Parker, who visited the archives in 2006 with Jay Farrar of Son Volt before they drafted Jim James of My Morning Jacket and Will Johnson to complete the project. "We were kind of going pretty quickly [through lyrics]. It was pretty much a gut reaction to what you saw on the page."

The results range from folky contemplation to woolly electric squalls, bolstered by New Multitudes' balanced writing, vocal and instrumental duties. The shared effort extends to live shows where James largely plays bass, and Parker and Johnson trade turns at the drums. "The set kind of carried on with that thought, pulling equally on the oars, as it were," Parker, 43, says from his Vermont home, "Ultimately we were thinking of Woody."

Sarah Lee Guthrie, who mined the archives for her 2009 children's album Go Waggaloo, says the range of lyrics exposed across various projects shows a side of Woody beyond his image as a union advocate. "One of the things that strikes me most is the spirituality in his writings," she says. She recalls a story where Woody filled out a hospital form that asked his religion. When told he couldn't write "All," he erased it and put "None."

"I love that he was always the kind of guy to bring people together and not push any views out of the way," she says from her home in the Berkshires. "It was all or none."

Guthrie Family Reunion draws from Woody's old catalog as well as newer songs, including a taste of Mermaid Avenue. "That's a lot of the appeal to the new generation," says Guthrie, noting that Wilco's Jeff Tweedy and Pat Sansone are producing her and Irion's third album, expected early next year. "There are a lot of people who wouldn't have known about Woody if it wasn't for Mermaid Avenue."

Guthrie and Irion, who'll also play their own sets at Green River, took a rocking, textural turn on their 2011 album Bright Examples. "I'm in a much better place on my own, to step out of that and not have to prove anything," she says. "The past year being what it is, I'm really proud to sing some Woody Guthrie." ×××

SWEET DAMNATION

Diving into the soda-ban debate

I USUALLY DON'T WADE INTO political waters, but there's a topic in the news that's so contentious and controversial that it's tearing families apart, and I can't rightly ignore it. I'm talking about the battle over the proper direction to point the utensils in the dishwasher. This shouldn't even be a debate, since obviously you want to load the utensils facing down. What, I should grab a knife by the blade when I'm unloading this thing? You might think the utensils get cleaner if they're facing up, but trust me, it makes no difference. See, right now you're eating with a fork that went into the dishwasher tines-down, and you don't appear to have contracted cholera. Case closed.

Now that we've got that settled, let's tackle the fight over big sodas. This is the next frontier in American arguments that must totally confound people in countries like Somalia. Maybe you're sitting there in Mogadishu, bullets whizzing overhead, trying to keep the flies off your piece of rancid goat meat, when you hear the news anchor on Warlord Radio mention that in Cambridge, Mass., they're debating how much Mountain Dew the citizens should be able to carry in a single cup. And then you think, "That's it. I'm hijacking a French yacht tomorrow." (For some reason, the French don't seem to have gotten the memo about Somali pirates.)

Cambridge Mayor Henrietta Davis is contemplating a ban on big sodas. How big, and how much of a ban, remains to be seen. The whole exercise strikes me as massively pointless, because if you want to drink a few gallons of soda you can just multiply your smaller servings. It's sort of like how we ban huge guns but then allow millions of smaller guns. Whether you shoot at a guy once with a piece of field artillery or a few hundred times with an assault rifle, that guy's probably going to be like, "Hey, cut it out."

> It's sort of like how we ban really huge guns but then allow millions of smaller guns.

To cite one example that proves the irrelevance of soda-container dimensions, when I was in eighth grade, I knew a kid who'd drink a 12-pack of Mountain Dew in a sitting. I think he was training for his near future when those cans would hold something stronger than Mountain Dew. This is a kid who intentionally shot himself in the head with an air pellet gun just to demonstrate his machismo. He'd bring squirrel pelts to school. He once stood on my shoulders and held me underwater at the local lake. When he dropped out of high school two days into freshman year, I don't remember missing him much. My point is that anyone who drinks that much Mountain Dew is probably the kind of sociopath whose intake of high-fructose corn syrup should be the least of our worries.

Still, I understand the thought process behind the anti-soda crusade. A 44-ounce soft drink is roughly equivalent, calorie-wise, to two McDonald's hamburgers. But a McDonald's 32-ounce chocolate Triple Thick shake is 1,160 calories. Burn it! It's a witch! Sorry, I was just exercising my traditional New England urge to condemn things.

Limiting soda size would make no difference to me, because I'm aware that there's such a thing as diet soda, which tastes almost the same and has zero calories. Given the choice between a tasty option that makes you fat and an almost-as-tasty option that has zero calories, I'm mystified that so many people regularly opt for non-diet soda. It's like you're saying, "Well, here are two Ferraris. One costs $200,000 and the other is free. I don't love the color on the free one, though. Where's my checkbook?"

The only way to change behavior is to cut through the fuzzy haze of blissful ignorance that shrouds so many of our dietary decisions. Instead of outlawing tubs of soda, every bucket o' Dr. Pepper should have its calorie count emblazoned on the side. I'm a big believer in the power of shame and ostracism. That's why I have mirrors in my house. And that's why I can no longer bring myself to order the Legal Sea Foods tuna burger.

A couple years ago I stopped at the Legal's in the Philadelphia airport, where they're required to post nutritional information on menus, and I was appalled to discover that my beloved tuna burger is 1,240 calories. I felt like the people who discover too late that Dexter is a serial killer. Why am I on this table wrapped in plast... uh-oh.

The good news is that the Legal's lobster roll is less than 600 calories. The bad news is that lobster is "market price," which means, "Don't ask." And you know what? I don't. I'm all for transparency and education, but sometimes food needs to keep a few secrets and let me enjoy my lunch. ×××

MARIA MENOUNOS

by Jonathan Soroff / Photographs by Cheyenne Ellis

Medford's favorite daughter talks about her dancing days, celebrity crushes and which places are bumpin' in Boston.

Photographed by Cheyenne Ellis; hair and makeup: Francine Valdivia; wardrobe styling: Melinda Tarbell; assistant stylist: A[illegible]; [illegible]la Co[illegible]ts: [illegible] Swim; necklace: Nashelle; location: Andaz West Hollywood

Renaissance woman MARIA MENOUNOS was born and raised in Medford and graduated from Emerson College. She hosts the entertainment news program Extra and is the creator of AfterBuzzTV and the author of The Everygirl's Guide to Life. She was the youngest person ever to host Entertainment Tonight, the Today show and the Nightly News, and is the only journalist to have conducted an interview with the entire Obama family. Menounos sang in front of 600 million viewers at the Eurovision Music Competition Awards and placed fourth on the past season of Dancing With the Stars. She founded the charity Take Action Hollywood! and is a Diabetes Awareness Ambassador. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Who's the next celebrity train wreck?

Maria Menounos: [Laughs.] I don't know. The current celebrity train wrecks seem to be holding on, so there isn't a heck of a lot of room.

Celebrity you're most sick of reporting on?

Lindsay Lohan.

More than Kim Kardashian?

No. Kim's my friend. She's a very successful working woman who had an unfortunate marriage, which a lot of people go through. There's no comparison.

Was Dancing With the Stars the most grueling workout of your life?

Absolutely. I never, ever realized what kind of body you can get from dancing. A dancer's body is crazy, and I'm not someone who's ever had a real workout routine. I just sort of did what I could when I could. I'm pretty lucky to begin with in that department, but now I want to maintain the shape I got into. It'll definitely involve more dancing.

What's up with your foot?

You mean my feet? The last time I had an MRI done during the show, I had three stress fractures in my left foot and two in my right. The good news is that I went to the doctor this week and had a new MRI done, and three of the five fractures have healed. I'm doing everything I'm supposed to, including not wearing too-cute shoes.

Think you were robbed by not winning the show?

No. It was a super-competitive season, and I'm happy with how it worked out. I'm proud of myself. I overcame a lot of injuries and fought like the Bostonian I am, and I did every single dance possible on that show.

Think the show is rigged?

If William [Levy] had won, maybe I'd think that. [Laughs.] No, it's definitely not.

Fantasy dance partner?

I don't want to dance with anyone but Derek Hough.

Red-carpet beauty secret?

I have this product called Jemma Kidd, a body glimmer, but it's not cheesy. It just gives you this nice glow. I've used so many beauty products, and even the Dancing

With the Stars makeup people were blown away by it. I'm obsessed with it.

Anyone who makes you starstruck?

I get starstruck with wrestlers. I grew up watching it, and at WrestleMania I got so giddy.

Wrestling is TOTALLY fixed.

No. Wrestling is a sports entertainment show. And that's all I'm gonna say.

Who'd win Jell-O wrestling: you or Giuliana Rancic?

Me, of course. I love her, and even though she's a feisty strong Italian, I'm a stronger Greek, and I know wrestling. She couldn't take me.

Jessica Alba and Charlize Theron ate your dust as Cybervixen of the Year at the Spike Video Game Awards in 2005. Do they snub you on the red carpet?

I remember interviewing Charlize not long after, and she gave me a little s. It was so funny.

Worst red-carpet faux pas?

Fashion-wise? I wore a dress to a VH1 thing, and there was no way to wear a bra with it. It was backless. So I wore pasties, and lo and behold, the dress was completely see-through with the lights on the red carpet. You can see the pasties that just look like big nipples, and I ended up in Playboy magazine because of it.

Big Hollywood event that's the most fun to cover?

The Super Bowl. It's both a Hollywood event and the greatest sporting event. It's so much fun. Of course, I like it better when the Patriots are there. In fact, you'll appreciate this: Mr. Kraft was here, and we were trying to meet, and he was going to come by the Improper photo shoot, where I was watching the Celtics game. It was pretty awesome.

MARIA'S PERSONAL BOSTON'S BEST LIST

DATE SPOT: "The Public Garden. It's peaceful, beautiful and romantic, both day and night. At night, the bridge and statues are lit up, and the stars are above you. In the day, the spectacular landscaping and the birds. It's just one of my favorite places."

COMFORT FOOD: "My mother's kitchen."

PIZZA: "Regina Pizzeria. I go to the one in Medford, not the original North End one, and it's awesome. I do like Greek pizza, too, and I'm thinking of opening a Greek pizza place in L.A., 'cause they don't have good pizza here."

PLACE TO SHOP: "Charles Street is cute, but Newbury Street has Ben & Jerry's, so it's a tough call."

HANGOUT: "In a month, I'll be going to the opening of my friend's bar in Somerville, on the border of Medford. It's called Daddy Jones."

UNDISCOVERED TREASURE: "The problem is that if I discover something amazing, I tell everybody about it. But I'll go with Emerson's Paramount Center. They have an amazing theater, a black box theater, a screening room where they do film series. It's very cool."

HOTSPOT: "The Liberty Hotel. I remember the first time I came in, it was a Friday, and I was like, 'Whoa! This place is bumpin'!' I love that it's not just a hotel. I love the restaurants. I love being able to stumble back to my room after a night out with my friends. And Calvin Cherry, who takes care of me there, is the most amazing human."

COLLEGE HANGOUT: "Well, we always went when it was Brigham's, but my friends and I still go to Colleen's in Medford. That's always a stop. But I have been cheating lately and going to Arlington for Brigham's."

BREAKFAST ON SUNDAY PLACE: "I'm not a brunch girl. I'm a Dunkin' Donuts girl. So that's breakfast."

PLACE YOU THINK EVERYONE WHO COMES TO BOSTON SHOULD SEE: "Well, I got to show the Rock around when he was filming in Boston, and I took him to Bob's for a steak and cheese and a few other places in Medford. As for historic sites? Paul Revere's house or the Freedom Trail, but one that a lot of people don't know about is the Royall House and Slave Quarters in Medford."

Is there a piece of Hollywood gossip you know to be true but could never report?

Lots. Don't get me drunk. [Laughs.] Just kidding.

Person you'd most like to make over?

Everyone! When I was doing my book tour for The Everygirl's Guide to Life, I wanted to do makeovers as part of it. I wanted to do one in every city. I'd like to do a makeover on a vet who really needs it. That would be rewarding.

Do you take your own advice from your book?

I do, but sometimes I need reminders. My boyfriend looked at me the other day and said, "You need to reread your book. You're getting disorganized again."

Celebrity crush?

Not to step on Stacy [Keibler]'s toes, because she's a good friend of mine, but I'll say George Clooney, because he's a great filmmaker and a great actor, and I really admire his skill. He's a true philanthropist. He's charming and courteous. And he's George Clooney.

Worst-dressed celebrity?

I wish I had the magazines in front of me. I could answer really fast. I guess I'd have to go with Björk.

Favorite Hollywood couple?

Tom Hanks and Rita Wilson. They're what it should be. They're a great family. Amazing, normal, down-to-earth, genuine people. They love each other. I look up to them.

Best perk of your job?

It's different every day, and I get to try really crazy things I probably otherwise wouldn't get to do. Sing backup for Justin Bieber? Be a Dolly Parton impersonator in Vegas? Who wouldn't love to do that? ×××

BAGELS

Rosenfeld Bagels

There really are some things (two, to be exact) that New York does better than Boston: subways and bagels. But with Rosenfeld, the Hub gives the Big Apple a run for its bagel-baking money. Tasty variations include caraway and blueberry, with spreads like mocha-chip cream cheese or Boursin-shallot-chive. But who needs bells and whistles—or even a toaster—when a plain bagel with a schmear is this good?

BAR FOOD

UpStairs on the Square

Last year, this veteran of the Cambridge dining scene embarked on a makeover. When doors reopened in late 2011, fresh decor and a brand-new bar greeted patrons. From your perch, you can still order the old menu favorites, but now you've got bites like the city's best lobster pizza and a shirred egg with bacon butty, which bar manager Augusto Lino calls "the secret jewel on the menu."

BRASSERIE

Eastern Standard Kitchen & Drinks

Brasserie, noun: an informal restaurant, especially one in France or modeled on the French incarnation serving a large selection of drinks. Kenmore Square may not be gay Paris, but Eastern Standard's impeccable hospitality, unmatched cocktail menu, expert Gallic fare and hit-the-spot late-night chalkboard specials allow you to pretend you're within sight of the Seine. Leave your passport at home and order up an Au Provence (ES's take on the vodka gimlet, made with tarragon and fresh lime).

BRUNCH

Mistral

Sometimes brunch just fills a need—if a hangover requires sopping up, a greasy egg sandwich does the trick. But for occasions when brunch is more than therapy, this classic French bistro dishes up refined creations like lump crab–and–chive omelets or chocolate-chip pancakes with banana brûlée and Nutella. Mimosas are made perfectly—with Veuve. Don't miss the sinfully delicious cinnamon buns. They're baked to order, so bring a side of patience with your appetite.

CHARCUTERIE

51 Lincoln

When it comes to fresh and local, this suburban gem doesn't mess around. Sneak up to the rooftop, and you'll find fresh herbs and vegetables. On the charcuterie board, it's more of the same. Pâtés are made in-house, duck ham is smoked on the premises and sausages are aged in a small fridge by the bar. Cheese selections come courtesy of Wasik's in Wellesley. This is unctuous snacking at its finest. 51 LINCOLN ST., NEWTON, 617-965-3100, 51LINCOLNNEWTON.COM

BURGER

Ten Tables

In March, Ten Tables owner Krista Kranyak opened Grass Fed, a casual JP spot dedicated solely to burgers of the beef, chicken and chickpea varieties. Next door at her flagship Ten Tables, the namesake TT Burger tops a juicy (humanely raised) beef patty with farmhouse cheddar, caramelized onions and not one but three sauces (house-made bacon aioli and mustard, and A10). The options now abound, but nothing beats the original.

BURRITO

Anna's Taqueria

Everyone has their own burrito peccadillos. Some people demand a tortilla that's warmed just right. Others require perfectly melted cheese. And there are the finicky types who worry that the fillings need to be evenly spread. Anna's offerings meet all of these standards, but where they truly shine is in flavor. They use only the freshest vegetables and meats and offer far more than grilled chicken and beans: Tongue, spit-shaved meat and the tenderest carnitas keep the pickiest burrito addicts full and happy.

CHINESE

The Best Little Restaurant

There's nothing little about the portions at this underground favorite (owner Frank Wong is a founder of China Pearl, another, slightly bigger, Chinatown institution). The standards stand out—sweet and sticky spareribs, garlicky stir-fried greens, string beans and pea tendrils. But the real reason to come are fish dishes like lobster, fresh conch and a delightfully crispy, crunchy whole fish.

CHINESE-AMERICAN

Bernard's

It's tough to find a dim sum brunch in the 'burbs, which is one of the reasons this Chinese-American spot inside the Mall at Chestnut Hill is a perennial favorite. Diehards for off-the-menu authenticity may cry foul, but Bernard's consistently turns out dishes that please, like exceptional clams paired with black-bean sauce. Mark the calendar: In 2013, the restaurant moves into the former Macy's space inside the mall.

BREAD

Pain d'Avignon

The perfectly crusty on the outside, airy on the inside loaves from this Hyannis bakery can be found in restaurants, coffee shops and grocery stores around town. We're partial to the subtly sweet raisin-pecan. Started in 1992 by four friends from Serbia, Pain d'Avignon bakers don't use preservatives or artificial ingredients. It's just bread, baked in the Old World style: plain, simple and tasty.

CLAM CHOWDER

Neptune Oyster

Neptune is an oyster bar—and a spectacular one at that—but the chowder is what captured our hearts this year. The stock alone is heavenly, and is rounded out with native cherrystones, salt-pork and chunks of rustic, earthy potato for a full-bodied flavor. And we're not the only ones swooning: Neptune's chowder is a must-order for the Patriots' Wes Welker.

COCKTAIL

Brick & Mortar

What happens when veterans of the Boston bar scene open an inconspicuous Central Square spot without any signage? It packs in the industry folks. Brick & Mortar—which opened in late 2011 in the old Enormous Room space—still attracts a few people looking for electronic music (as well as neighborhood regulars), but the cocktail list is as informed and discerning as the bartenders who come here on their evenings off. Order the Temporary Fix for a gin–meets–sno-cone experience, or opt for an authentic sip like the Sentimental Gentleman, a garnish-free mix of single-malt Scotch, Nux Alpina and Benedictine.

COFFEE SHOP

South End Buttery

A good coffee shop obviously requires good coffee. The South End Buttery, a local favorite in one of the neighborhood's sleepier sections, has that and then some. Here you'll find brews made from Somerville's MEM Tea Imports, airy breakfast pastries, hearty sandwiches and the sinfully rich Buttery cupcakes. Don't leave without trying the red velvet and packing up a coconut for the road.

COMFORT FOOD

The Franklin Café

The Franklin Café is where Boston chefs decompress after a night on the line. PBR and Fernet shots probably have something to do with the appeal, but so does the food. It's dished up right and served 'til 1:30 am, making the hangout a late-night rarity. With items like cornmeal-crusted catfish, house-cured corned beef brisket and smoky spareribs on the menu, you might as well be in grandma's kitchen. (That is, if grandma roomed with an attractive hipster slinging tasty cocktails.)

Kickass Cupcakes

Three words: deep-fried cupcake. This insult to the diet gods is just one of the ways in which the Davis Square bakery lives up to its name. Delectable and created from scratch each day, the regular lineup of treats sits in the case alongside daily specials like the PB & MC (a peanut-butter cupcake with chocolate chips, milk-chocolate ganache and roasted peanuts). Gluten-free and vegan selections make Kickass an option for all stomachs, and a new cupcake truck means these babies are easy to find across the river, too.

Sam La Grassa's

A thread on one local foodie site makes a bold claim: "Sam La Grassa's > Sex." Before you scoff, take a bite of a loaded sandwich, preferably the chipotle pastrami. The meat's cooked for hours in a secret stew of stock and brown sugar, stacked on a grilled Italian roll with sharp Swiss and coleslaw and slathered with a tangy, house-made, chipotle honey mustard. It's one sexy beast of a meal.

DESSERT

Market

There's a lot to be said for a dessert that leaves a table speechless. One such treat is the salted-caramel ice cream sundae at Market at the W Hotel. House-made ice cream is topped with rich fudge sauce and sprinkled with candied peanuts and caramel popcorn, while a dollop of vanilla-bean whipped cream stops the show. And you'd have to lack a sense of aesthetics (and taste) to pass on the cheesecake with blueberry sorbet and lemon cream.

Sweet Cheeks

This was a hot—excuse the pun—year for 'cue in Boston, with the arrival of a spate of new restaurants, rib shacks and food trucks. Despite the competition, Sweet Cheeks, from Top Chef alum Tiffani Faison, quickly achieved star status. The secret? Stellar sides (collard greens enlivened with pork, creamy mac 'n' cheese) and smoked meats that would do any Southerner proud. Don't miss the biscuits—warm, fluffy and big enough for two, though you'd be wrong to share—and a butterscotch pudding that's worth the visit all by itself. 1381 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON, 617-266-1300, SWEETCHEEKSQ.COM

DIM SUM

Winsor Dim Sum Cafe

This relative newcomer to Chinatown will revolutionize your dim sum experience. Dishes are made to order, and, rather than ogle and pick plates straight from a cart, diners mark their choices on a handy checklist. Dumplings are piping hot, never too doughy, and deliciously stuffed with minced pork, juicy shrimp or vegetables (if you're feeling green). Egg rolls are wonderfully crisp, a fine break from the oily renditions elsewhere. Available in the sounds-bad-tastes-great department: turnip cakes, seared to perfection.

L'Espalier

This Back Bay shrine to the exquisite, from the James Beard Award–winning Frank McClelland, is one of Boston's best restaurants and also one of its most romantic. GREEK

Kouzina

Kouzina is a study in contrasts. The restaurant is intimate, but the flavors—and the skill in the kitchen—loom large. True, it's a hike to get to Waban, but the dishes, like moussaka with spiced ground lamb, eggplant and béchamel, are worth the trek. Plus, prices are a perfect fit for families and the budget-conscious. In a city not known for its Greek food, Kouzina (whose owners also run the excellent Cognac Bistro in Brookline) is a find.

HIDDEN GEM

Delfino

Roslindale's Delfino is far from the neighborhoods and price points of the city's hyped dining scenes, which is why it's so surprising to encounter cuisine that rivals fare from more ballyhooed kitchens. Dishes skew Italian (and heavy on the seafood) with touches of French and American, as evidenced in apps like crunchy, savory sourdough bruschetta. Topped with eggplant tapenade, cherry tomatoes and goat cheese, and drizzled with a basil and balsamic reduction, it's a San Francisco–meets–Old World bite of bliss.

ICE CREAM

J.P. Licks

Though this Boston institution now serves up fashionably tart frozen yogurt, a scoop of great, full-fat ice cream is still the best summertime treat. Creative flavors abound, with year-long faves like brownie brownie batter and coffee Oreo on the roster. Or try one of the changing seasonal specialties like cream stout (starring Sam Adams beer) and el diablo (around for Cinco de Mayo).

INDIAN

Tamarind Bay Bistro and Bar

Modern and upscale, this Harvard Square oasis adds inspiration to a cuisine that, in Boston, often lacks flair beyond an emphasis on ghee. Dishes are exquisitely complex and from literally all over the map (of India). Raahra Gosht is a must: lamb simmered in a wok until perfectly, and surprisingly, crisp.

If you're in the market for pasta and red sauce, hit the North End. If you want a meal of impeccable ingredients crafted with expert, Old World techniques, hit Bay Village. Chef Charles Draghi's menus change daily, but his work always spotlights the flavor of the flora or fauna on the plate. Fettuccine might be topped with roasted beets and their greens one night; an unsurpassed confection of razor clams with fennel appears the next. What's consistent is Draghi's astonishing knowledge of food and wine, parlayed into masterpieces.

FOOD TRUCK

Bon Me

Thank goodness Boston has finally jumped full-force onto the food truck bandwagon. Leading the pack is Bon Me, which rolled onto the scene in 2011. Run by a husband-and-wife duo, the truck shows up anywhere from Cleveland Circle to City Hall Plaza (they, of course, tweet updated locations and specials). Track them down for a tasty banh mi, steaming bowl of noodles or a spicy ginger lemonade sure to put some zip in your step.

JAPANESE

Oishii Boston

This pair of Japanese restaurants is often billed as serving the best sushi in town, and rightly so. Venture away from raw fish à la carte, though, to really taste a surprise. Steamed lobster in a filo net with grilled pineapple, Kobe beef with pear maki or shrimp with mushrooms and peppers in a tempura sphere are examples of the kitchen's creativity. Wash it down with a Passion Saketini to taste an example of the bar's.

Riffing on Asian youth culture with a lineup of soju cocktails, fried dumplings, bibimbap and stews (like the kalbi tang with strips of tender short rib and vermicelli noodles), it's inspired by one of Seoul's bustling shopping districts. Here's a hipster homage to the Korean dive.

Recently under new management, Cafe Rustico serves up exceptional fare at perfect prices and enormous portions. The lobster ravioli in creamy tomato sauce deserves its own fan club. MEXICAN

The Painted Burro

Gastropubs are so yesterday. Lately, Boston's been all about high-end Mexican. Securing the top spot in the new crop is this bright and brimming Davis Square restaurant from the team behind neighboring Posto. There's nothing not to love about the chicharrón, which here stars chunks of New England pork belly kissed with a sweet-and-spicy tamarind glaze. Mexican street corn pairs just right with a cold beer or the El Jefe mezcal cocktail. As for the house-made chips and salsa, there's none better.

FISH TACOS

Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake

The secret to chef Brian Poe's fish tacos is, perhaps surprisingly, fish. He uses the freshest cod caught in Boston waters, frying up 10 pounds of it a day. For his riff on the classic, Poe cooks the fish in a celery-root tempura and tops it with a slaw made from apples ("for a touch of New England") and Anaheim chilies. A dollop of chipotle crema seals the deal.

It's hard not to smile when you first walk into this romantic enclave off Inman Square. From the bright colors on the walls to the enticing smells that waft from the open kitchen, Oleana is a delight to every sense. Ana Sortun inventively adapts Middle Eastern flavors to local ingredients, yielding winners like whipped feta with sweet and hot peppers, fatoush with golden beets and fried mussels perfected in a Turkish tarator sauce. It was a long time in the making, but the wait was worth it. Combining international flavors (gleaned from her worldwide travels) with a sophisticate's palette, the downtown locale keeps the dining room packed with financiers and a high-tech crowd. Dishes like the whole roast fish of the day and the magically crispy lamb sausage flatbread keep them coming back, and keep the critics singing her praises.

Worse is the fact that the chefs, no matter their level of skill or inventiveness, are out of their element in the impromptu locations. CAMBRIDGE: CENTRAL SQUARE

Baraka Café

There are holes in the wall and then there are secret gardens fragrant with spices and blooming flowers. Here, petals float in your cherbat—a spiced lemonade blended with orange essence—and meze plates burgeon with smoky eggplant and spicy pepper pesto. These are the flavors of Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco, divinely realized in the casserole-style fava-bean, chickpea and lentil couscous. This is a perfect spot to stop and smell the roses.

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE

Russell House Tavern

Ladies, here's your test: If your guy can't handle the Harvard Yard cocktail of Rittenhouse and Allspice Dram, send him packing. Or tell him to man up by devouring hearty edibles like crispy pigs-head cake (decadent, with a soft poached egg), hickory-smoked lamb's-belly toast and the various offal offerings. With drafts from Mass. and Maine, house-made ginger beer and $1 oysters after 11 pm, these are the guys we want to hang with. (Because of their brains, of course.)

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE

East by Northeast

The dining room is spare and radiant—a smoldering burnt orange—with unembellished walls and a couple dozen seats. It's calming, intimate—a serene setting where Asian-influenced elements like miso honey-butter infuse New England fiddleheads. Gems like pork belly on mantou bread shine. Stop in while the dumpling of chicken and salt cod is still in season, a standout with potato-fennel puree, and taste how harmonious and creative fusion can still be.

CAMBRIDGE: KENDALL SQUARE

Area Four

The moniker sounds like something from a realtor's map, but the food is anything but dull. The pizzas—with thick-cut morsels of bacon, parsley, hot pepper and pudgy clams—are one incentive to visit; house-smoked fish and the chewy garlic knots with pecorino and gremolata provide a couple more. While the wood-burning ovens are the centerpiece, don't ignore the cocktail program with drinks like Just Dill With It: potato vodka with black pepper, dill-seed simple syrup and an aromatic sprig.

L'Impasto

All the flavors here hearken to Rome, the hometown of chef/owner Ricardo Passini. He's perfected house-made pasta such as a paper-thin, layered lasagna of creamy mozzarella, wild mushrooms and Swiss chard and the succulent gnocchetti sardi with clams and broccoli rabe. You'd be wise to save room for the exemplary wild-berry tiramisu of house-made ladyfingers, fresh fruit and a lavish pour of mascarpone. The best news: Their newly-granted wine and beer license means you can add a Chianti to your meal.

CHARLESTOWN

Navy Yard Bistro and Wine Bar

When Old Ironsides is just steps from your door, you could easily deliver subpar fare and capitalize on the naïveté of tourists. The Navy Yard does the opposite, embracing all guests as if they're potential regulars by dishing up delectable buttermilk fried oysters and steam-kissed PEI mussels. Stroll in on a Sunday or Monday night and enjoy a $7 glass of wine with crispy fish tacos or meatloaf for less than $15 (to meatloaf skeptics: It's better than your mom's).

JAMAICA PLAIN

The Haven

If you're under the impression that Scotland's culinary tradition begins in a whiskey bottle and ends in a takeaway curry, try the Haven's superb vegetable bridie—or pie—with Cotswold cheese, and their take on haggis with neeps—savory, minced-lamb pudding with honey-mashed rutabaga. A jovial neighborhood hangout where regulars converge over savage-sounding craft beers and ciders like Thistly Cross and Skull Splitter, there's always a friendly word from proprietor Jason Waddleton and regular sausage specials from an inventive kitchen. The brunch, too, is one of the best deals in town. No whiskies, sadly, but have you tried Drambuie lately?

DORCHESTER

Tavolo

"Good food is everything" is chef Chris Douglass' mantra, and it's everywhere from Tavolo's loaded antipasti to the side of "Max's Meatballs"—a plump and saucy pair. Mark your calendar for weekly Wednesday Pasta Tours, a clever, inexpensive three-course stroll through the regions of Italy, complemented by a flight of wine, or perhaps a Tuscan Sunrise with grapefruit-infused tequila.

DOWNTOWN

Silvertone Bar & Grill

The steak tips are just an entryway order. Mainstays of buttery bread-crumbed mac 'n' cheese, fried calamari and goat cheese crostini hit the spot, while the latest rotation of industry folk and Suffolk Law students keep the environs good and raucous. Since you're on the scene where Boston's Fernet fixation debuted, knock back a shot with a High Life via bartender/co-owner Josh Childs' "Happy Meal #2."

EAST BOSTON

Angela's Café

The tastiest of sauces are allowed to simmer and brew for hours, occasionally disturbed by vigilant stirring. Craft is lovingly employed in the making of Angela's chocolaty mole poblano, named for Puebla, Mexico, where she was born and raised. Here you can finally taste authentic versions of widely bastardized chile rellenos and carne asada, while the model vehicle for mole is the enchilada—a stuffed corn tortilla showered with radishes and cheese.

Massimino's Cucina Italiana

There's textbook Italian cuisine, and then there's required reading. From the rich lobster ravioli to silky limoncello, Massimino's Cucina is a primer on the time-honored, multicourse supper apportioned in a festive, familial setting. Close quarters insist that you make yourself comfortable, so go ahead and order that bottle of brunello.

SOMERVILLE

Pizzeria Posto

It's OK to take matters lightly when it comes to pizza: chef/owner Joe Cassinelli imports only "00," the most finely ground, feather-light flour, prized for imparting a distinctly textured, soft-to-crispy crunch. His superior pizzas feature crushed San Marzano tomatoes and house-made fior al latte mozzarella, while Enzo—their brilliant wine preservation system—preserves open wines for up to two months. È squisito!

SOUTH BOSTON

Local 149

Citypoint's bar scene was once marked by dismal pubs more apt to feature framed Good Will Hunting stills than good food. Along came Local 149, working tough with a menu arranged like aisles at Home Depot—"Nuts & Bolts," "Fabrications" and "Hand Tools." But it's funky enough to dish up a superior steak chimichurri with coconut rice, not to mention a surplus of craft cans, bottles and drafts, like Sixpoint Sweet Action Cream Ale and a seasonal rotation of 21st Amendments.

149 P ST., BOSTON, 617-269-0900, LOCAL149.COM

SOUTH END

Coppa

Since tackling Chopped's Mystery Box, and winning, executive chef Jamie Bissonnette has won new fans at Coppa, his South End epicenter of refined, oinky eats like oven-roasted pig's tail with mostarda glaze and mortadella salumi. Quench your thirst with a pitcher of Aperol Spritz or a fizzy Lambrusco by the glass. And if weather permits, bet on the over/under of Boston terrier sightings from the patio on Shawmut Ave.

Trade

With the dappled light of sunset coming through the gigantic windows and pendant bulbs lending a sparkler effect after dark, Jody Adams' new power bistro in the Financial District is a tribute to industrial chic. Spacious interiors stocked with high-tops and small plates speak to focus and style. A Cockney Mule topped with candied ginger is a good starting point to explore the international menu. (Snag a salt cod flatbread from the specialty pizza oven.) There's a handful of microbrews, plus Colt 45, if you really need to loosen your corporate noose.

BEER BAR

Sunset Grill & Tap

Sunset brandishes the motto "Life's Too Short to Drink Cheap Beer," but life may also be too brief to sample everything here: Some 112 beers on tap, nearly 400 in bottles, plus a menu that roams from Tex-Mex to pasta to the fabled curly fries to a new emphasis on fresh fish. Choose a beer club (tap, micro, Euro—the selection never stops), and divvy up the collection of seasonals, meads, ciders and the truly obscure (Mahr's Keller Ungespundet?).

BEST-KEPT SECRET

The Sunset Cafe

This Portuguese place near Inman Square proffers a free pizza or wings (whether you want 'em or not) with every beer tower. Homey, perhaps to excess—the owner brings his fluffy dog to the bar—the traditional specials like goat, tripe and rabbit earn tail wags. Come for the games (especially if you're a soccer fan), and try the chourico flamejado, a fiery Portuguese sausage that'll have you calling for the siege of another tower.

DIVE BAR

Paddy's Lunch

Forget the lunch; there isn't any. Eat up the lore. Tip O'Neill campaigned here. So did a young JFK. Margaret and Patrick Fennell opened Paddy's in this working-class neighborhood 78 years ago, practically the moment Prohibition was repealed. It's still all Budweisers, shamrocks, politics and horse racing for the hard-core regulars, but appreciative newcomers are welcome, says a fan of this "living memory of loyal friends and simple times."

GAY SCENE

Geoffrey's Cafe

Geoffrey's just turned 21 and celebrates its legal drinking age with its first year back in the Back Bay after a stint in Roslindale. You'll find the same saucy cocktails (the Frou Frou, the Walk of Shame, the French Silk Panties) priced at an alluring $5–$9, and dig-in bistro fare like chicken and dumplings and beef bourguignon. Lunches are relaxing, after-work is invigorating and Sunday's disco brunch is a scream.

MIXOLOGIST

Noon Inthasuwan

As bar manager at Patricia Yeo's Asian eatery, Moksa, Inthasuwan has earned accolades for her creativity and praise like "awesome" and "a real talent" from her peers. At 32, she's also garnered an impressive education. Inthasuwan is a certified sake expert, holds a diploma from the International Sommelier Guild and is one of fewer than 20 female Court of Master sommeliers in the country. She's got a soft spot for the amber liquids, and at Moksa she's matching single malts with habeñero, brandy with tea-soaked sugar cubes and other wild fusions you've never seen or tasted before.

HOT SPOT

Saloon

As a subterranean chaser to their wildly busy Foundry on Elm, Ken Kelly and David Flanagan opened this pre-Prohibition style bar in December. Downstairs from the hustle and bustle, you'll find, well, more bustle, but also a variety of beers, bubble and squeak and a balance sheet packed with 120 bourbons. With a warm decor of worn carpets, wood paneling and exposed brick, the speakeasy chic is rounded out by cocktails like a Negroni shaken with house-made vermouth.

DANCE CLUB

Middlesex Lounge

Live bands every Wednesday heat up the summer calendar at this club for dancers who don't care which C-lister was paid to ignore them from the VIP booth. The tight quarters and long lines continue, as does the popular Make It New techno-electronic dance night on Thursdays. A mix of everything from classic hip-hop to disco fuels your Friday nights, while the esteemed DJ Kon spins until 2 am on Saturdays. The crowd is fun, young, laid back and ready for a very good time. Keep an eye out for Group Hug, a spirited gay night on the last Sunday of the month. 315 MASS. AVE., CAMBRIDGE, 617-868-6739, MIDDLESEXLOUNGE.US

PLACE TO DRINK ALONE

J.J. Foley's Café

An ideal place for a solitary drink and a think, this 103-year-old watering hole is where the Boston police force unionized and Herald scribes wined their muses. There's still no shortage of characters. While away the day's quieter hours in peace, then, just when your meditation threatens to turn into isolation, a crowd approaches. As the clock nears last call, Foley's is a favorite final stop for an uninhibited crew eager to befriend a stranger who has ideas to share, or at least one with enough singles for a shared game of Buck Hunter.

best burgers in town. For a nightcap, grab yourself a spiked concrete, in flavors like drunk mint chocolate chip. Written by industry folk, seemingly specifically for industry folk, the menu manifesto demands: no shrieking, whining, sucking face, foul language or flatulence—rules on which all customers can agree.

LESBIAN SCENE

Milky Way Lounge at Bella Luna Restaurant

This perennial favorite remains at the top of the class for revelry. There're your usual suspects: a pool table, trivia, karaoke. But then there are the curve balls: live comedy, a giant wall-mounted Connect Four set, patio bashes with mariachi music or a steel drum band. With queer dance-parties and Dyke Night events, this place is a local institution. And with cocktails like the peachy Ron Swanson and a catalog of creative pizzas (sauce and dough made daily), the Milky Way shines any day of the week.

PRE-FENWAY

The Baseball Tavern

Oh, for the days of the Idiots, jumping over the bar, pulling pints for the faithful, and, might we add, winning. These days, player hijinks have mellowed (like it or not) but the Tavern's spirits remain as high as Fenway hopes. Three floors—with one of the city's best roof decks—host Sox fans from summer into fall, when the bar doubles as one of Boston's best venues for college football. Open since Rico Petrocelli's rookie year (trivia fans), make this your first stop before the first pitch.

POST-FENWAY

Citizen Public House & Oyster Bar

From spitballs to spit roasts. Should you have room left after all the lips and… tails in your ballpark franks, this gem by the diamond can cook up family-style suckling pig roasts for 10. If the signs from the dugout call for more drinks, score a punch bowl for four or more. You're in a team spirit, after all. Try the Sticky Wicket (Hendrick's gin, Pimm's No. 1, cava, lemon and strawberry simple syrup). It's a cricket term, but have a couple of glasses, and you're game for anything.

PRE–TD GARDEN

The Four's Restaurant & Sports Bar

Named for the number on Bobby Orr's sweater, the Four's dates back to a time (1976) when the Bruins could hang out by the Garden without being mobbed. The mobs still appear, but now it's to soak up the lore, and a 20-ounce draft or two, before checking out the team's current roster. Big with fans, beat-writers and team staffs, it's a great place to dig into a Larry Bird (a chicken panini, natch) and rub elbows with people who may have met the man in person, or can at least tell you a tall tale about him.

166 CANAL ST., BOSTON, 617-720-4455, THEFOURS.COM

HOTEL BAR

The Hawthorne

This lush and refined lounge is the latest from the gang behind Eastern Standard and Island Creek Oyster Bar. Attention to detail is a hallmark of the team, captained by bartending legend Jackson Cannon. There's an urbane cocktail-party vibe, with local art and the pages of extra–fine-print novels on the wall, and small plates of deviled eggs available on the menu. With some of Boston's best bartenders (including gadabout Scott Marshall) on staff, the Hawthorne continues the crew's hot streak. 500A COMM. AVE., BOSTON, 617-532-9150, THEHAWTHORNEBAR.COM

POST–TD GARDEN

The Greatest Bar

Skee-Ball is the latest attraction at this towering sports spot where fans gather when the game is over, but the night is still young. There's a 14-foot HDTV on the ground floor, and things only look up from there, with four levels of dancing, drinking and DJs. Cut loose like an inexhaustible Tyler Seguin, or take a seat, sink into a "belly-buster" burger and hold court like a front-row Vince Wilfork.

PRO-ATHLETE PLAYGROUND

Strega Ristorante and Strega Waterfront

Since the 2009 opening of the North End eatery and, two years ago, its waterfront sister, young stars (Brad Marchand, Rajon Rondo, Rob Gronkowski), veterans (Wes Welker, Matt Light), visitors (Jay Cutler, Mike Bibby) and legends (Dominique Wilkins, Mike Eruzione, Shaq) have all stopped by. As the commercial contends, some people say it's the best Italian food in the city. Turns out, it's the people that need to occasionally carbo load.

IRISH BAR

The Black Rose

The Roisin Dubh is the first of the Auld Sod transplants, having opened in 1976. This expansive pub, with two stages and a fireplace lounge, has been pouring pints and frying up heaping plates of fish-and-chips for 35 years. Nightly live music sets the Celtic scene better than the old Guinness ads at your usual plastic Paddy. The acts are of the local variety, but members of the Chieftains and a group called U2 have played this pub that's been a rock in Faneuil Hall for decades.

SINGLES' SCENE, 20-SOMETHINGS

Lolita Cocina & Tequila Bar

Like its namesake, Lolita is young, pretty and precocious. We'd say smokin' if it was allowed, but the aura is just that. The mood is set with dim, bordello lighting, and while it can be tricky to navigate this multilevel platform for platforms and playful margaritas, there's always someone in the crowd to lean on, or into. Pop Rocks–dusted cotton candy provides the sugar rush; more than 180 tequilas provide the spirit to see where the night takes you.

SINGLES' SCENE, 30-SOMETHINGS

Red Lantern

Just a year old, this sensual hall of Asian fusion draws suits and slingbacks from Back Bay and the South End. The exposed brick walls host Buddhas peering out from lofty alcoves, spying on the flirtations taking place under the eponymous lights that hang from the beamed ceiling. Lots of standing room prompts mingling at the mirrored bar, plus there's table service for scorpion bowls. The music sets the mood but allows for conversation. The theme is new to the area, and the scene is just what you've been looking for. 39 STANHOPE ST., BOSTON, 617-262-3900, REDLANTERNBOSTON.COM

Bond Restaurant & Lounge

The kids flock to Faneuil Hall, but more refined folks (those who prefer to avoid the kiddie table) can be found a couple blocks away at Bond. The Langham Hotel's chic lounge is a playground for elegant women and buttoned-up gents looking to lie back in a sleek setting. Glitzy chandeliers and dollar-themed cocktails, like the Liquidity, with Grey Goose Le Citron, lemon and Chambord, keep the party going well past happy hour, but there's not a bedtime to be concerned about in the bunch.

Jerry Remy's Sports Bar & Grill

If anyone was going to master the art of the sports bar, it was going to be Jerry Remy. From a burger served on fried dough, to endless taps and mammoth TVs, the two locations of this two-year-old institution are perfect places to catch a game—by the park or by the port. This summer, they'll launch the first suburban outpost in Remy's birthplace of Fall River. Typical ballplayer. Always trying to make his way home.

SUMMER SCENE

Legal Harborside

Legal's stands with Duck Tours and the Freedom Trail as surefire tourist draws, so locals didn't exactly consider them fashionable. Times have changed with Legal Harborside. The 20,000-square-foot behemoth is the centerpiece of Liberty Wharf and a total departure for the mall-friendly brand. In the summer months, there's nowhere better to be than the roof deck, complete with impressive water views and glistening pitchers of Seaport Spritzer. Surprise, surprise, there's nowhere better to be on New Year's, either—thanks to a state-of-the-art retractable roof. 270 NORTHERN AVE., BOSTON. 617-477-2900. LEGALSEAFOODS.COM/RESTAURANTS/BOSTON-LEGAL-HARBORSIDE are all behind an expanded bar, which now offers some wiggle room along with fancified snacks. Daintily fork your way through bone marrow with pickled ramps or a truffle "pot pie," while Maul gets out the power tools and stirs you up a cocktail in a coconut.

WORST TREND

White Whiskey

When you want a classic cocktail, why bother with the sober gentility of a Manhattan when you can harken back to the days when real men hid stills in hollow trees and stained their beards with tobacco juice? Why have aficionados recently taken a shine to raw whiskey? Blame clever marketing, foodies, magazines (oops) and our collective search for anything new. But the fact is, by skipping the barrel aging process, white whiskey lacks the sweet notes and amber hue. It's glorified Everclear that looks like water, stings like acid and hopefully is headed back into the woods.

NEIGHBORHOODS

ALLSTON

Deep Ellum

A rich nightlife scene complete with amazing food and music: That's the essence of the funky Dallas district known as Deep Ellum. Texas native Aaron Sanders and cofounder Max Toste brought that spirit to Allston in 2007, and their neighborhood hangout honors the original with a top-flight cocktail program, country-fried steak and a rotating selection of local drafts. Check out the back patio for summer drinking, or head next door to sister restaurant Lone Star Taco Bar for late-night eats.

BACK BAY

Post 390

Post 390's personality is like a character from great American fiction: square-jawed, experience-oriented, unafraid of raging bulls or hangovers. And while Gatsby and Daisy aren't sunk into the barstools, their Ivy League counterparts are, sipping Post juleps splashed with mint simple syrup and topped with a Myers rum float. Share refined classics like Scotch quail eggs and venison stroganoff, or join the old sports warming up by the blazing hearth with fire-roasted Gibsons.

BEACON HILL

Harvard Gardens

Long a neighborhood favorite, Harvard Gardens stepped up their game when chef Nick Dixon took the reins last year. Now, the seasonal offerings include non–status quo snacks like devils on horseback and jalapeño polenta fries with red-pepper sauce. These'll build your drinking base for an array of taps and summer cocktails like the Rye Refresher, brightened up with agave nectar, grapefruit and mint. If you get hungry again, there's a late-night menu until 1 am. But get here early, as HG dominates the after-work scene.

BRIGHTON

The Green Briar Irish Pub

In a city packed with Irish pubs, this Brighton destination is known for dominating the international sports scene. Plenty of TVs and projection screens allow fans to cheer for rugby and hurling, soccer (or footy). Expect a lively atmosphere with the upcoming London Olympics. Our advice? Mingle with the locals during the week while enjoying traditional eats like bangers and mash and make room for the younger crowd reveling on the weekend.

BROOKLINE

The Abbey

As with a good friend, your relationship with your local bar should be easy, supportive and provide a space where you're free to unwind. Washington Square Tavern alums (and longtime friends) Josh Sherman and Damian Dowling bring that same familiarity to the Abbey, a comfortable hangout that delivers every time. Get reacquainted as you sample more than 30 types of Scotch, curated by region, and share plates from a full dinner menu until 1:30 am.

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE

Charlies Kitchen

You might expect a neighborhood bar to slowly cave to the community's ever-civilizing aesthetic. But some bars are institutions of their own, including his highness, the "double cheeseburger king." Reveling in their neon signs, city-famous jukebox and dive appeal, Charlies has rocked with grimy panache for decades. The one major change after more than 40 years? An outdoor beer garden, built in 2010, which brings the party outside so the neighbors can join in on the summer fun.

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE

Trina's Starlite Lounge

Boston's brunch community is a ravenous beast. To recover, the industry crowd heads to Inman on Monday mornings for French toast and Adirondacks (butter-infused bourbon, maple syrup, chocolate-covered bacon chaser), or, if they just need to hydrate, a carafe of the Kool-Aid du jour. For regular diners, the story is the dog of the day, washed down with a bucket of High Life pony bottles, a selection from the Bud Light Lime cocktail list, or concoctions like the Fallen Angel (a spicy mango margarita with a BBQ-dusted rim) created by one of the more fun-loving collections of bartenders in the city.

CAMBRIDGE: KENDALL SQUARE

Meadhall

Based on the name, you'd think Meadhall would be a favorite of Erik the Red or Thor the god of thunder. But regulars of this Kendall oasis tend to be far nerdier, or at least beer-geeky, due to an epic selection of 100 taps, including a squadron of Belgians (and a healthy store of mead, of course). Giant windows bestow an airy feel, and an upstairs lounge sets the stage for strategy meetings over house-made duck sausage and steak tartare. No Thor, but it's a lovely place to get hammered.

CAMBRIDGE: CENTRAL SQUARE

Brick & Mortar

As befitting a hip watering hole, there's no phone number or sign, but there's also a welcome absence of pretension. In the small shell of the former Enormous Room comes this curved copper bar from B-Side Lounge founder Patrick Sullivan. Misty Kalkofen (herself a former B-Sider) designs the cocktail-centric menu. The Bullet for Fredo (Nardini Aquavite Grappa Riserva, Perucchi Vermouth Blanc, Campari) is mixed, bottled and served undiluted for some tough love, and the nightly Crush on a Stripper shot offers sweet surprises.

CAMBRIDGE: PORTER SQUARE

Temple Bar

Cool without being conceited, fun but not full of itself, Temple Bar has a warm, genial vibe that makes it a consistent neighborhood favorite. The intimate, urban interior hosts a crowded bar scene, but the experienced bartenders meet the demand. Try the seasonal punch or the Larry Collins (a mix of Applejack, honey, lemon and tiki spices) alongside a treat from the bar menu. Your body is a temple, and it should be built from white-truffle flatbreads.

CHARLESTOWN

The Warren Tavern

The Warren Tavern is thought to be the first building constructed after the Battle of Bunker Hill. (Hey, people gotta drink.) For 230 years, they've kept people coming back. Paul Revere was a famous regular (probably because he never had to buy a drink in this town), and today's patrons return for lobster rolls, live music and the atmosphere of a Boston bar with all of the history and a lot fewer tourists. The Tavern has been a neighborhood cornerstone for centuries, a claim not too many bars in the country can make.

NORTH END

Bricco Ristorante & Enoteca

There's paradox of choice, and then there's a catalog of signature drinks, a motley index of grappa, port, brandy, Scotch and more wine than Bacchus could shakily wave a stick at. It's a wonder anyone ever places an order at this place. Wine is clearly the primary libation, with a sizable selection of Italian and American offerings. A barstool by the open floor-to-ceiling windows is the prized seat, providing views of the sightseeing throngs and the dapper diners supping on wild boar, pastas and more. 241 HANOVER ST., BOSTON, 617-248-6800, BRICCO.COM

DORCHESTER

Dbar

In 2005, trend-setting Dbar became the "first place in Dorchester to offer martinis," says owner Brian Piccini. "And we've always had a blast doing it." Regulars congregate for Show Tune Tuesdays, when the tables and chairs are replaced at 9 pm with throngs of musical patrons. Add a bamboo-studded patio for outdoor dining and delicious, affordable items like the crispy Giannone chicken under a brick, and voilà—neighborhood staple.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING

Silvertone Bar & Grill

Ducking underground for a night at Silvertone is like entering a portrait by a tattooed Norman Rockwell. The staircase opens up into a warm, dark space stocked with neighborly types. Memorabilia and childhood photographs of staff and friends provide the hospitable backdrop. The prices are amiable, too, with $3 High Lifes and $15 pork chops. This season, cool off with a selection from the list of summertime highballs, like the Triple C, with cucumber vodka, St-Germain, lime juice and soda.

EAST BOSTON

Ecco

The bartenders at Ecco are always moving and shaking, contending with more than 25 different cocktails. Reclining beneath a time-honored wall of celebrity scrawls, guests sip these spirituous selections—like the house martini, with blue cheese–stuffed olives—and roam a varied tapas menu, which highlights treats like house-made meatballs. Stop by for "Appy Hour," an after-work crowd-pleaser from 4 to 6 pm, and the "Midweek Munchies Menu," with $1.25 à la carte snacks.

FINANCIAL DISTRICT

Howl at the Moon

Amid the gold-and-marble edifices of Boston's buttoned-up dollar district, a battle is waging, between pianists. Also, bachelorettes in blue wigs are slamming drinks like the X-Boyfriend and the 3-Way. People are gyrating, and everyone is vowing to never stop believing the words of Steve Perry. Not for you? Suck down a literal bucket of alcohol for $25, and it will be. The musicians can play you just about anything you want; all you need is a bit of cash and some operative motor skills, so don't stop believing.

JAMAICA PLAIN

Brendan Behan Pub

James Joyce may have feared dogs, but the barmen at Brendan Behan embrace them all, mangy or not. Everyone's got a story to tell, and in lieu of loud games and television there's good old-fashioned colloquy. Be sure to remember your lunch box since this bar is drinks-only. The warm space, the strong cocktails, the dark ales, the no-cover live Irish music—perhaps dogs really do go to heaven.

MISSION HILL

The Squealing Pig

Punch Monday in its smug, stressful face with a free night of Kung-Fu movies and heavy metal, befittingly called Spin-Kick Mondays. Shoot a whiskey. Test the limits of your waistband with a Mars Bar Toastie, made with Belgian waffles, bananas, strawberries, fresh cream and a gooey Irish Mars Bar. The big beer list, the cheeky singing Irishman, Mike Barrett, and the juicy Pig Burger with smoked bacon, Gorgonzola and chipotle onions are all reasons why Mission Hill loves its screeching denizen.

NEWTON

Dunn-Gaherin's

This congenial little tavern is known for a colorful array of beer, filling food and a giant collection of whiskies, bourbons and Scotches. The prices are worth celebrating, as well. A 12-year Glenlivet can be had for a mere $8.50, and a glass of wine seldom breaks the $10 mark. Honestly, you'll be lucky if you can still feel your face by 10 pm. Of course, this is Newton, so comporting yourself with a modicum of restraint is encouraged. And see that your tie stays out of your tartar sauce.

SOMERVILLE

Highland Kitchen

This isn't a reason to go to Somerville, it's a reason to live there. Sip the Tito Santana, made with vodka, Mexican Coke, grapefruit and chocolate bitters, put some Hank Williams on the jukebox, and order the—write this down—buffalo-fried Brussels sprouts with blue cheese. These are healthful vegetables on a soul-staining bachelor party. With an array of $3–$5 dollar snacks, the convivial bearded barmen and the pints that span from Butternuts Porkslap pale ale to Bear Republic IPA, this bar is a must.

SOUTH BOSTON

Lucky's Lounge

Odds are you'll have a great time at this surreptitious spot. Favorites like Kobe sliders with quail eggs, mac 'n' cheese with Ritz cracker crumbles and goat-cheese deviled eggs crowd the menu. Bartenders will fuel your night with classics like Rob Roys and Sidecars while you sway to free live music, Wednesday through Sunday. If you go overboard on martinis Saturday night, drag yourself back for a hair of the dog and enjoy a Bloody Mary during the popular Sinatra brunch.

SOUTH END

Anchovies Food & Spirits

The warmth of an antique sconce tenderly washes over the dining room, and the reflected gaze of an animal skull's hollow eye socket meets yours under the light of a twinkling disco ball. This is killer ambience. Also, the bar is fully stocked and open late, and the pizzas and rotating lasagna-of-the-day are reasons to head over for dinner, as well. And, of course, there's the unique pleasure of an overflowing cocktail sipped in the company of a wall-mounted swordfish.

ACTOR IN A LOCAL PRODUCTION

John Malkovich in The Infernal Comedy

Despite his famous visage, John Malkovich still has a great actor's ability to morph into a part. In The Infernal Comedy he embodied Jack Unterweger, a real-life serial killer who, in the tradition of another famous Jack, made headlines in the 1990s for murdering prostitutes. Staged at Arts-Emerson's Cutler Majestic Theatre, the crime drama–meets–opera was Malkovich at his creepy best—darkly humorous and chillingly charismatic.

ACTRESS IN A LOCAL PRODUCTION

Laura Latreille in Time Stands Still

Depicting the psychological trauma of war is no easy task, but veteran actress Laura Latreille excelled in Donald Margulies' thought-provoking Time Stands Still. Playing Sarah Goodwin, a photojournalist recovering from injuries sustained while on assignment in Iraq, Latreille blazed with frustrated energy, outshining her also-brilliant costars in the Lyric Stage Company's intimate production. Intense doesn't even begin to cover it.

BURLESQUE COMPANY

The Boston Babydolls

Many people associate burlesque with T&A and tassels. The Boston Babydolls provide that, but they also use the medium as a way to challenge the limits of theater. Last Halloween, they took over a vacant storefront in East Cambridge to produce The Wrathskellar, a macabre, immersive experience that served striptease with a side of screams. This summer, they'll continue their once-monthly showcase at the Estate in addition to taking their show on the road with the food-themed A (Re)Movable Feast.

This May, the institution branched out, opening a new location in Central Square and doubling up the laughs.

CONCERT

Audra McDonald at Symphony Hall

Philistines may know her solely from her stint on the medical drama Private Practice, but Audra McDonald doesn't just have acting chops—she also has an amazing set of pipes, as Boston audiences learned firsthand last October. Fresh from the set of the American Repertory Theater's much-lauded production of The Gershwins' Porgy and Bess, the five-time Tony Award winner graced Symphony Hall with her charismatic presence, using her rich and commanding voice to keep audiences enthralled while kicking off the latest season of the Celebrity Series.

DJ

DJ Die Young

Under the nom de plume of DJ Die Young, Jamie Michalski has spun his masterful mixes everywhere from the grand old halls of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum to the sweaty decks at Good Life. His style is similarly all over the place—but in the most magnetic way. Mixing jungle beats, J-pop and techno rhythms, his sound is fresh and insanely danceable. Get in the groove at Make It New, his weekly dance night at the Middlesex Lounge.

DANCE COMPANY

Urbanity Dance

Just four years old, Urbanity Dance is still a newcomer on the Boston dance scene—which for many is defined by the annual foray to see The Nutcracker. This upstart company has performed high-energy, boldly contemporary pieces everywhere from Jacob's Pillow in the Berkshires to the Alvin Ailey Citigroup Theater in NYC. In case that wasn't reason enough to check out their creative productions, Urbanity shows a social conscience by giving community workshops and open classes. Take a bow, please.

GALLERY

Panopticon Gallery

From a Polaroid-themed exhibition to a show focused on depictions of toys and childhood ephemera, Panopticon Gallery is firmly on the cusp of contemporary photography. Since taking over in 2010, owner/gallery director Jason Landry has been decking the halls of Panopticon with images that range from sinfully funny to strikingly beautiful. It's small wonder that Landry's gallery has a reputation among collectors for discovering pieces by up-and-comers. Good thing the pics are often available for purchase.

HOTTEST TICKET

The Gershwins' Porgy and Bess

Might as well start referring to Diane Paulus as Lady Midas, because everything she touches turns to awards-season gold. This year, the artistic director at the American Repertory Theater scooped up two Tony Awards, including best revival of a musical, with her radical adaptation of the 1935 opera Porgy and Bess. The revisionist version received overwhelmingly positive reviews for its depiction of love and violence in Catfish Row, a predominantly African-American neighborhood in Charleston, S.C. But critics weren't the only ones going crazy over Porgy— every night was a sellout at the Loeb Drama Center—and its success now continues on Broadway.

Come for the spicy goat stew, stay for the '80s ballads. MOST EXCITING 2012-2013 SEASON

Broadway in Boston

As any devotee of live theater knows, reading rave reviews is a poor substitute for seeing the production in person. But thanks to Broadway in Boston, we no longer need to hop a Fung Wah to catch the country's most buzzed-about shows. The lineup for 2012-2013 is filled with everything from singing missionaries to immortal teenagers (who, thankfully, don't sparkle in the sunlight). See War Horse and Memphis this fall at the Boston Opera House. Next spring, catch The Book of Mormon and Tuck Everlasting at Citi Performing Arts Center Colonial Theatre.

NEXT BIG THING

Theatre on Fire

It's not often you get to see a live show from the comfort of your own couch, but this season, Theatre on Fire decided to move the performance off the stage and into the living room. Aptly named "Home Invasion," the innovative program is just one of the ways the small company tested theater's traditional boundaries, producing works that are edgy and artistic, but never pretentious. "We don't want people to be intimidated by the theater," explains producing artistic director Darren Evans. "We like to do work that has a little meat on the bones—something to dig into." When they're not performing in homes around town, Theatre on Fire can be found at the Charlestown Working Theater.

NONFICTION BOOK BY A LOCAL AUTHOR

The Better Angels of Our Nature by Steven Pinker

The subtitle to Pinker's newest tome explores a daunting, yet surprisingly optimistic, issue: Why violence has declined. The prolific Harvard professor goes to great lengths to address the subject in his 832-page text, citing examples culled from an exhaustive exploration of history, psychology, cognitive science, economics and sociology. The result is a book that not only chronicles our complex relationship with violence, but also opens up the possibility that, perhaps, people are evolving and becoming more peaceful on a neurological level. It's not light reading, but is quite possibly the best way to counteract the nightly-news blues.

NOVEL BY A LOCAL AUTHOR

From the Memoirs of a Non-Enemy Combatant by Alex Gilvarry

The New York Times called Alex Gilvarry's debut novel a "left-handed love letter to America," which is a smooth way to describe the strange story of a Filipino fashion designer and former Brooklynite who finds himself imprisoned for crimes against the country. Gilvarry's witty prose drips with satire, but reality ultimately takes over to show—despite what Harold & Kumar would have you believe—there's nothing funny about a stay at Guantánamo.

PRODUCTION

Next to Normal at the Speakeasy Stage Company

These days, even therapists have therapists. With songs like "My Pharmacologist and I," this musical addresses mental health with an unexpected touch of levity. Winner of three Tony Awards, Tom Kitt's Next to Normal is an emotionally compelling pop-rock treat about a suburban family dealing with the effects of bipolar disorder and electroconvulsive therapy. When Speakeasy Stage brought the musical to the Boston Center for the Arts, they failed to anticipate the level of public interest. The sellout show was extended twice.

A standing ovation for the Huntington, which, for the past 30 years, has produced provocative, bold and funny works, many of them migrating to larger stages in New York. Helmed by artistic director Peter DuBois and managing director Michael Maso, they brilliantly stage American classics like Arthur Miller's All My Sons and Thornton Wilder's Our Town, as well as world premieres, like The Luck of the Irish by Huntington playwriting fellow Kirsten Greenidge.

Lady Lamb the Beekeeper

Though Aly Spaltro has no formal vocal training, the wunderkind and recent Somerville transplant has garnered comparisons to the likes of Feist and Merrill Garbus with her stripped-down sound and eerie, fascinating lyrics. Her latest single, a cover of Cher's "All I Really Want to Do," is a bluesy ode to almost-love that perfectly showcases her broad range. LADYLAMBTHEBEEKEEPER.COM

PLEASANT SURPRISE

Jeremy Lin

Why are we lauding a member of the New York Knicks? For two reasons. First, because Lin turned out to be a breakout star, proving that the Harvard basketball program isn't just an elaborate, ongoing joke staged by The Lampoon. Second, because his epic streak proved so fleeting, and he plummeted from unstoppable to merely pretty good before a season-ending injury. Ha ha, Knicks. You thought you might begin to win, but to your chagrin, success has been sinfully thin.

CLUTCH PERFORMANCE

Rondo's 44 Points

We all know how the Eastern Conference finals turned out against the Miami Megalomaniacs. But at least the Celtics went down swinging, their efforts exemplified by Rondo's dominance in Game 2. His numbers—a career-high 44 points, along with 10 assists and eight rebounds—don't fully communicate how thoroughly Rondo took over the game. Not only did he score all 12 of the team's points in overtime, he played every minute of overtime after playing every minute of regulation. And, in an encouraging sign for the Celtics' future, Rondo's postgame attitude was more in line with a seasoned leader than an occasionally temperamental upstart. Asked to comment on the game of his life, Rondo simply said, "We lost."

COLLAPSE

2011 Red Sox

It was vintage Red Sox. And not the post-2003, multiple–World Series–winning vintage. Last fall, the Sox managed not only to miss the playoffs, but to do so in a historically grotesque fashion. Both the Sox and Yankees were one strike away from winning their respective games on the last day of the regular season. A win from either team would've triggered a one-game playoff to keep the Sox in the hunt for the wild card. However, in keeping with decades of Boston baseball tradition, the Yankees screwed us while the Sox shot themselves in both feet. They missed the postseason, thus completing the worst September collapse in baseball history, out-failing even the Atlanta Braves, whose own September debacle would've set the bar for implosions were it not for the Sox's futility. Shall we mention that the Atlanta Braves were once the Boston Braves? They were. Evidently, there's no expiration date on bad mojo.

ENIGMA

Tim Thomas

Let's get this out of the way: Thomas won the Vezina Trophy, the Conn Smythe Trophy and the Stanley Cup in one season. He was historically awesome. But that was 2011, which now seems like a long, long time ago. Last season, Thomas' off-the-ice antics became increasingly bizarre. Besides his conscientious-objector stance on the trip to the White House, Thomas' Facebook activity began to garner more attention than his work in the net. When a February post about the Catholic church spurred a firestorm of media attention, Thomas asserted that his private views are private. When somebody pointed out that a public post on Facebook is, well, public, Thomas replied, "You have the right to ask the question, but I have the right to not answer the question." Then, a few months later, Thomas mysteriously announced—via Facebook, of course—that he's taking next year off. He's like the Ricky Williams of hockey, except more inscrutable.

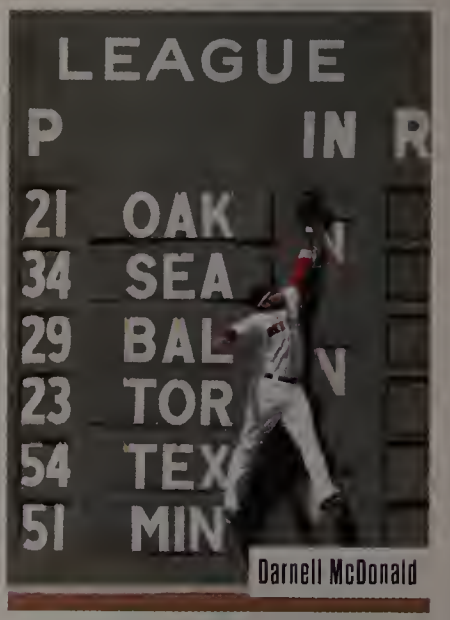
EXAMPLE OF WHY BOBBY VALENTINE DOES NOT HAVE AN EASY JOB

Darnell McDonald, Pitcher



This is what it's come to: By May 6, barely a month into the season, Darnell McDonald had a loss on the mound. In case you're not totally up on your Red Sox roster, Darnell McDonald is an outfielder. Granted, he was pressed into service as a relief pitcher in the 17th inning of a game against the Orioles (who themselves put first baseman Chris Davis on the mound), but the situation was emblematic of the injury-related challenges facing Valentine

OLYMPIC ATHLETE

Kayla Harrison

A product of Pedro's Judo Center in Wakefield, Kayla Harrison has a great shot at taking home America's first Olympic gold medal in judo this summer. She already won gold at the 2010 World Judo Championships, making her a prohibitive favorite in London. Harrison moved to Wakefield from Ohio five years ago, leaving behind a sad past that involved an assault by a former coach. Having risen to the level of the world's best fighters despite that life-derailing episode, Harrison's already demonstrated that she's one competitor the opposing judokas will have a hard time taking down.

Darnell McDonald

this season. In May, it's an outfielder on the mound because it's a 17-inning game; by August, Valentine might be asking for spot starts from Jerry Remy and long relief from you, sir, the fan in Row 3! Somewhere, Tito is breathing a sigh of relief.

EXPERIMENT, FAILED

Chad Ochocinco

The man formerly known as Chad Johnson caught only 15 passes last year, which works out to around $400,000 per completion. Or, looking at it another way, the Pats paid him nearly $6 million per touchdown, of which he had one. Mr. Ochocinco is, by all accounts, a great locker-room guy and an upbeat fellow to have on the team. But cold, bloodless math is the ultimate arbiter in the salary-capped NFL, and the numbers were not on his side. On his way out the door, en route to a new job with the Dolphins and what will surely be a great season of HBO's Hard Knocks, Ocho tweeted that New England fans were "wicked awesome." So even if he couldn't get a handle on the New England playbook,

EXPERIMENT, SUCCESSFUL

Scott Podsednik

Prior to the Sox picking him up and activating him in May, Podsednik was mired in AAA limbo like an outfield Kenny Powers. But when Ryan Sweeney got a concussion and Cody Ross broke a bone in his foot, Podsednik suddenly found himself part of the Show at Fenway Park. Since then, he's been pressed into service at leadoff, hitting well over .300, stealing some bases and generally demonstrating that he's still got gas in the tank. He's currently on the DL with a groin injury, so we may not be seeing much of the 36-year-old again, but hopefully he brought enough of that 2005 White Sox World Series magic to the locker room. The Red Sox could use all the help they can get.

MVP

Tom Brady

Brady finished the 2011 season with 5,235 passing yards, one of only four players in NFL history to break 5,000 yards in a season. (The fact that three of the four times happened in 2011 makes it no less impressive.) He was selected for the Pro Bowl, of course, and tied an NFL postseason record with six touchdowns in the game against the Broncos. We could fill the rest of this issue waxing poetic about Brady's heroics and his value to the Pats, but suffice it to say that no other player on any pro team is more important to the overall success of their franchise. Brady's so good, he even got us to sit through a three-minute Under Armour ad on Funny or Die.

ROOKIE

Ryan Lavarnway

Two games from the end of the 2011 season, rookie catcher Ryan Lavarnway gets the call-up. The Sox absolutely need to win or they'll be eliminated from the playoff chase—but hey, no pressure. Under these trying circumstances, the former Yale philosophy major hits two homers and drives in four runs to help the Sox eke out an 8-7 win, keeping them tied for the wild card with one game to play. Lavarnway's effort proved for naught, but his dramatic debut indicates that this is one Yalie we'll want to hear from again.

NIGHTMARE REVISITED

even the ledger with the Giants. And if they lost, then New Yorkers would always be able to gleefully gloat that Eli Manning (Eli Manning!) twice trounced Tom Brady in the Super Bowl. And indeed, history was gut-wrenchingly repeated, as the Pats bent to the will of Manning and the Giants. Again. If there's an upside, it's that Peyton Manning will never have as many Super Bowl rings as his little brother, and there's at least a faint silver lining to anything that aggravates Peyton Manning. Hey, Giants: best three out of five?

SECRET WEAPON

Danny Woodhead

Unlike many of his Patriots colleagues, Woodhead doesn't have eye-popping stats. Instead, he's used sparingly, and to devastating effect. Woodhead recorded a single touchdown in the postseason, but that's one more touchdown than anyone expected from him. He has a knack for coming up huge on third downs, moving the chains when defenses are keyed to more obvious targets like Gronk or Branch. Against the Giants in the Super Bowl, he only caught four passes but averaged 10.5 yards per grab. You don't average a first down per reception unless you catch the defense by surprise. And you don't do that unless you're a secret weapon.

PHENOM

Nerlens Noel

Noel, a high-school senior from Everett, already looks destined for greatness. Ranked by ESPN as the top high-school player in the country and standing 6'10" (surely over 7 feet with his awesome hi-top fade), Noel attracted national attention in 2010 when he blocked 16 shots in two games. Now, after being recruited by multiple big-time basketball programs—Georgetown coach John Thompson Jr. personally attended the All-American Championship to watch him play—Noel has signed with Kentucky. Though he's leaving New England, we have a feeling we'll be seeing Noel again, on national TV. Next March, when you're filling out your tourney brackets, remember that Kentucky just reloaded with high-caliber ammunition.

WEAPON, NO LONGER SECRET

Rob Gronkowski

Two years ago, Gronk's success could be attributed to him being an unknown commodity. Last year, though, opposing defenders knew exactly what to expect, and they still couldn't do anything about it. Gronkowski finished the year with 1,327 yards (an NFL record for a tight end) and 17 touchdowns (ditto). He added another three TDs in the postseason, but was injured for the Super Bowl. Would a healthy Gronk have made the difference? Well, let's just say that New Yorkers should collectively thank the Baltimore Ravens for their latest Lombardi Trophy.

VICTORY LAP

Our Year With the Stanley Cup

For the first time since 1972, the Stanley Cup spent a year with the Boston Bruins. It went to Martha's Vineyard, appeared on stage with Dropkick Murphys and journeyed to that cold, northern place from where we import our hockey players. (No, not Maine.) Now, Lord Stanley is living it up in L.A., probably clubbing with Lindsay Lohan and getting polished with cruelty-free, organic beet-extracts. Well, enough! We want it back. The Bruins still have the talent to return the trophy to the town where guys like Fitz and Sully can use it for celebratory pints at the Warren Tavern (another of its stops).

BRIAN BABINEAU

CRAFTY VETERAN

Paul Pierce

What kind of madman stares down LeBron James and launches a three-pointer in his face with the game on the line? Paul Pierce, of course. There are probably hundreds of moments from the past season that illustrate Pierce's greatness—even his canny ability to draw fouls is a thing of beauty—but let's talk about the end of Game 5 against the Heat. When Pierce is feeling it, he's so unstoppable that he can spot up for a shot that everyone in the building knows he's going to take, then cold-heartedly knock it down. It's a lovely thing to behold: Pierce stalking around the three-point line and toying with the defender like a lion pawing at a wounded antelope. That victory-sealing shot was one of the biggest in Pierce's career, and he knew it was good before it even left his hand. And that's the Truth.

DAD OF THE YEAR

Ben Seisler

Don Rodman

You make a few deposits at the sperm bank, and the next thing you know, you're more genetically prolific than Shawn Kemp. Seisler is the Boston lawyer who learned last year that he has at least 70 children, a situation covered by Style Exposed: Sperm Donor on the Style Network. (Because nothing's more fashionable than spending some alone time with a Penthouse.) While Seisler may eventually be identified as the biological father of more than 100 kids, the real story here is that he made the donations to help defray the cost of law school. Well, it was probably more fun than applying for a Pell Grant.

CORNY MOVE

Calling 911 to Get Out of a Corn Maze

Last fall, Danvers gained national attention for a tall tale with more than a kernel of truth. A family of four—mom, dad and two kids—got lost in the maize maze at Connors Farm and decided to dial their way out. "We thought this would be fun. Instead, it's a nightmare. I don't know what made us do this," the mom told the 911 operator. Which begs the question: Can you call 911 if you don't like the Turkish Twist at Canobie Lake Park? Can you call if you can't find your car in the Common Garage? Incidentally, by the time the police found these children of the corn, they were a mere 25 feet from the road.

OO-GOOOER

Don Rodman

Founder of the Rodman Ride for Kids, which supports youth social services, Don Rodman's foundation raised more than $9 million last year. Rodman's charitable acts span decades and earned him the designation of knight by Pope John Paul II. There are a million tales of his good deeds, but here's just one: In 2007, he bought out the entire Colonial Theatre so that disadvantaged kids could experience a live performance. Both Suffolk and UMass have given him honorary degrees. Among other achievements, the Rodman Ride for Kids has sent 1,500 inner-city kids to Disney World. Even Rodman's 80th birthday party, held at the Seaport Hotel and World Trade Center, raised money for charity. Day in and day out, the Dorchester native commits himself to helping generations of Boston children catch the breaks that vaulted him from laundry-truck mechanic to philanthropist.

LOCAL TV SHOW

Chronicle

Producing a live TV newsmagazine five nights a week is a daunting challenge. That's why WCVB Channel 5's Chronicle is virtually the only show of its kind in America. Shayna Seymour, Anthony Everett and Ted Reinstein deliver a thoughtful, composed counterpart to the "If it bleeds, it leads" melodrama of nightly news. Part travelogue, part 60 Minutes, Chronicle's stories delve into the nuances of life in Boston—and the rest of New England—in a way that remains unique on television, even 30 years after the show's debut. That's no easy task, but it's why we count ourselves among Chronicle's loyal viewers.

ESCAPE

Benji Smith and Emily Lau

Smith and Lau are the Cambridge couple who booked a honeymoon cruise on a rather unfortunate vessel: the Costa Concordia. In January, when the ship heeled off the coast of Italy, its hull ripped open by one of the dumbest blunders in maritime history, almost all of the lifeboats became useless, and chaos broke out. Amid the havoc, Smith found a rope and tied a series of knots to fashion a makeshift ladder. Shimmying down the side of the listing vessel, Smith and Lau escaped by jumping onto the roof of a pitching rescue boat. So dire were circumstances aboard the ship that 120 people subsequently used Smith's improvised escape ladder. Thus making him 120 times more useful than the captain of the Costa Concordia.

INVESTOR

Curt Schilling

After his Red Sox heroics, Curt Schilling could've whiled away the years signing baseball cards and having guys named Sully buy him beers. Instead, he launched a video-game company called 38 Studios. According to the free-market mantra that Schilling so vocally celebrates, good business plans attract plenty of private investors eager to get in on the deal. Turns out, "Former baseball player starts mammoth video game company from scratch" isn't a pitch that gets the venture capitalists pounding on your door. Now Rhode Island taxpayers are footing the eight-figure tab for Schilling's financial misadventures. With all the weird twists this story has taken—the bounced check for $1.1 million, the hoard of 3,200 gold coins Schilling used as collateral on a loan—the 38 Studios saga sounds like the basis for a reality show. Hey, that gives us a business idea…

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

John H. Gass

Did you know that Massachusetts uses a computer program that scans your driver's license photo and compares your face to millions of others in a massive database? Natick's John Gass learned this the hard way. The software decided that Gass looked like someone else and that his license, presumed to be fraudulent, should be revoked. Which it was, for 10 days, while Gass argued over his personhood with the RMV. The lesson here is that when you go in for your driver's license photo, shave half your head so that you look distinct. Problem solved.

MOST MISSED

Patrice O'Neal

Sharp, hilarious and honest, Boston-bred comedian Patrice O'Neal seemed on the verge of a career breakout when he died last fall at 41, following complications from a stroke. At Comedy Central's September roast for Charlie Sheen, O'Neal eviscerated host and Family Guy creator Seth MacFarlane, saying that he needed a collaborator (a Barbera to his Hanna) to slap him when he starts writing show tunes. O'Neal's brilliance was on display every time he sat in on The Opie and Anthony Show, where he'd launch into thoughtful discourses on race, politics or his taste for Brazilian sex tourism. He had absolutely no fear of personal embarrassment if there was comedy to be mined. Incorporating his weight problems and diabetes into his act, he recounted his doctor's advice to change his lifestyle or face a premature death. "And that wasn't enough motivation for me," he said. That's sad and—true to Patrice O'Neal—also funny.

MOST NOT-MISSED

Winter

Unless you're a plow driver, a diehard skier or a snowshoe salesman, last winter was awesome. After the freak October blizzard instilled fears that we were in for the Worst Winter Ever, Boston was graced with the type of balmy weather usually reserved for the otherwise downtrodden citizens of Baltimore. With temperatures in the 80s by March, our annual burst of springtime euphoria arrived early this year. If these agreeable climes persist, New Englanders might even be cured of our latent pessimism. But we doubt it, because next winter's definitely gonna be a bad one.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO

Last Halloween, fashion maven Marc Jacobs reinvented P-Town Hall as the hottest nightclub north of the equator. This place had everything—flash mobs, Debbie Harry, beaux arts types, giant swans, a gay pharaoh, 20-foot-tall eyeballs, pumpkin cabanas, a hamburger in drag, spooky trees and Mr. Rogers. And no, we didn't make up any of that.

ROMANCING THE BONE

UMass Memorial's Sexy Marrow Solicitations

Earlier this year, UMass Memorial Medical Center paid a $520,000 settlement for improperly recruiting potential bone marrow donors. Their strategy would've been a genius idea if it weren't so ethically and legally questionable. Five words: hot chicks at Patriots games. UMass Memorial posted model-caliber ladies in short skirts at venues like Gillette Stadium to convince passersby (read: horny guys) to volunteer for bone marrow testing. Said volunteers then sometimes got hefty bills in the mail—or their insurance companies got hit with the charges. UMass went from running 7,000 tests in 2008 to more than 40,000 by 2010, proving that with the right kind of persuasion, men will give 'til it hurts.

TWITTER FEED

Rob Delaney

Did you know that four out of five people in Boston (women included) are named Paul Sullivan? That's according to Marblehead native Rob Delaney, so we're inclined to believe it. Delaney is to tweeting what William Shakespeare was to bard-work. With more than 400,000 followers and 8,000 tweets, Delaney's prolific output on Twitter cultivates a growing audience for his stand-up shows. Go see him. And in the meantime, follow him. Here's one more: "Having THE BEST time in Berlin!!! Oh wait I'm in a laundromat."

We arrive at the Hatch Shell 13 hours before the fireworks begin. We've got our sun-block and deep reserves of patience. Grab the blanket and the Dunkin' Donuts mug secretly filled with merlot. Close-proximity canoodling at the Hatch Shell on July 4 is a bridge too far. We'll listen to the 1812 Overture in the car.

BARGAIN SHOPPING

The Garment District

Don't think of the Garment District as a thrift shop; think of it as an enormous closet (with some 40,000 pieces) whose contents perfectly fit your budget. Though their selection of vintage wear spans back to the 1950s, this Cambridge institution's largest department peddles contemporary clothing, much of it with tags still attached. Prices start in the single digits on everything from cowboy boots to couture. Even better: What they can't sell or use is donated to developing countries.

But they also stock boat shoes in more colors than you'll see on the Nantucket ferry (from Sperry, SeaVees and Sebago), exclusive dress shoes by Alden and Salvatore Ferragamo and boots by John Varvatos and Frye.

Power 'n' Flow at Health Yoga Life

Vyda Bielkus combats the chaos of modern life with focus, introspection and invigorating yoga. She doesn't play music during this Vinyasa class, bringing more awareness to breath and body. "Power 'n' Flow is a time to recharge the batteries and see where our life is, from the inside out." Bielkus, one of four sisters who run the new Beacon Hill studio, invites students of all levels to experience peace (and strengthening) to the core.

Participants do find the class tough, says owner Jody Merrill. AUGUST 4&5

ARE YOU READY TO COMMIT TO THE PAN-MASS CHALLENGE?

Through the Pan-Mass Challenge, ordinary people commit to achieving extraordinary physical and philanthropic goals. In August, 5,500 men, women and teens from 36 states and 8 countries will commit to riding up to 190 miles and raising $36 million for cancer research. Since 1980, the Pan-Mass Challenge has raised $338 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Somewhere along the PMC route lies a cure for cancer.

DREAM GIRL

JENNIFER HUDSON didn't win American Idol, but she's proven that a shower of confetti and a dour nod from Simon Cowell isn't the magic formula for success. Since competing on the reality show eight years ago, Hudson has outperformed her cohorts and earned unabated fame, including an Academy Award, a Grammy and more critical praise than a legion of Diana DeGarmos. The R&B songstress comes to Boston on July 4, singing her hits with help from the Boston Pops for the annual Fireworks Spectacular at the Hatch Shell.

On the Skids

High Rollers

Drawing inspiration from '70s cult-film Roller Boogie, Sam Forman, Jen Wineman and Eli Bolin's Roller Disco the Musical! is a parody on wheels. With 14 original songs in the style of Donna Summer and the Bee Gees, the romp transforms Oberon into a retro rink that'll smolder with sequined angst through August. The tale of the pressures of competition, young love and real-estate fraud won't weigh you down with drama. This one is just about letting the good times, well, roll.

Reviews by Sean Burns

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Bernie ★★ Director Richard Linklater adapts the true story of a gay, small-town Texas funeral director (Jack Black) with a penchant for stepping out with elderly widows. Shirley MacLaine hams it up to addled effect as a mean old lady, and Linklater pads out this murder tale with testimonials from actual residents of Carthage, Texas. It's half-documentary, half-feature, meaning that every time Linklater and cowriter Skip Hollandsworth don't feel like writing a scene, they can fall back on eyewitnesses to do the work for them. Kudos to Matthew McConaughey for eschewing his usual shirtless vanity in order to play a self-promoting lawman in rimless glasses and a silly hat. The movie is neither fish nor fowl, rife with easy shortcuts and outsized performances. Black's appeal continues to elude me, but Bernie could've been either a chilling documentary or a terrific character study. As is, it's neither. (At Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Dark Shadows ★★★ ½ I'm exhausted by the constant collaborations between Johnny Depp and Tim Burton, which too often find them putting a homogenized stamp of pale makeup and self-conscious quirk on preexisting properties like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory or (heaven help us) Alice in Wonderland. But in adapting this weirdo 1960s serial, these two have hit a sweet spot they've been consistently missing for almost 20 years. Genuinely odd, with a half-kidding tone, the film follows Depp's 16th-century vampire, cursed for all eternity by a spurned lover (the magnificent Eva Green) only to be unearthed in 1972. It's a visual feast, with sumptuous Gothic production design occasionally offset by tacky DayGlo colors. Popping with invention and a prankish, kinky sense of humor, the movie's soap-opera plotting dovetails nicely with Burton's career-long inability to tell a coherent story. Luxuriating in bizarre set-pieces and bloody asides, Dark Shadows is an extremely strange film, but it feels personal and particular. (In the suburbs.)

The Dictator ★ ½ For starters, even the beard looks phony. Sacha Baron Cohen, the comic genius behind Borat and Da Ali G Show, forgoes his usual guerilla pranks for safe, scripted folly. The first narrative he's attempted since 2002's woebegone Ali G Indahouse, The Dictator stars Baron Cohen as General Admiral Aladeen, the despot of an oil-rich North African country named Wadiya. He's an ignorant, petulant child suffering from the egomania typical of a dictator. After a promising start, the stupid plot kicks in, with Aladeen ambushed on a trip to the United Nations and replaced with a double. Broke and adrift in lower Manhattan, he falls in love with a hippy-dippy vegan (Anna Faris) and suffers every tired fish-out-of-water scenario you'd expect from a Mike Myers movie. The thrill of Da Ali G Show or Borat was watching Baron Cohen insinuate his outrageous caricatures into deadly serious surroundings. The Dictator has no such nerve, existing in an alternate cartoon reality where his satire doesn't sting. (In the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games ★ ½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of

Tyrannosaurus Wrecks

We may never know for sure what killed off the dinosaurs, but thanks to Steven Spielberg's classic Jurassic Park, we know exactly what would happen if a bored billionaire brought them back to life. Though followed by a couple of lackluster sequels (and rumors abound that the ol' T. rex will take another bite out of theatergoers in 2014), the 1993 original still exemplifies the perfect summer blockbuster. Jurassic junkies can relive the prehistoric mayhem when the film stomps into the Coolidge Corner Theatre on July 23. Caroline Praderio chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Hysteria ★ ½ A farce purporting to show how the invention of the vibrator rocked Victorian England, director Tanya Wexler's tract is instead one of those annoying period pieces in which characters stand around mocking the conventional wisdom of a particular time and congratulating viewers for being so forward thinking. Hugh Dancy stars as a young doctor fired from most medical establishments because he believes in germ theory and refuses to march around the operating room with dog crap on his shoes. Eventually he finds himself in the employ of Dr. Robert Dalrymple (Jonathan Pryce), who spends hours digitally stimulating housewives claiming to suffer from "hyperactive uteruses," when really they're just horny. There's material for a grand satire here, but Hysteria is devoted to proselytizing. Maggie Gyllenhaal's spunky suffragette hectors the audience about women's rights, so we can all pat ourselves on the back and acknowledge just how far we've, ahem, come. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Men in Black 3 ★ ½ A decade late, this lumbering $215 million behemoth stumbles into theaters punch-drunk, top-heavy and sweating so hard it's all but barren of laughs. Accounting for the monumental indifference of Tommy Lee Jones, Will Smith reportedly came up with the idea for a time-traveling villain to murder Jones' Agent K back in 1969, sending Big Willie on a Terminator-style mission to a groovier era to save his partner (well-impersonated by Josh Brolin). Don't worry about all the alternate time-line paradoxes that would obviously ensue, because the multiple screenwriters didn't bother. There's a bit of lip service about how a man of Smith's complexion might have a tough time in that tumultuous era, a potentially interesting conceit from which the picture retreats. Men in Black 3 started shooting back in September 2010 without a finished script, and now that all the reshoots, red herrings and character backgrounds have been patched together, it doesn't make a lick of sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

People Like Us ★ ½ This movie is predicated on misunderstandings that would never transpire if only the characters bothered to learn each other's last names. Transformers screenwriter Alex Kurtzman's directorial debut stars Chris Pine as Sam, the kind of callow yuppie that Tom Cruise could play in his sleep. (Unfortunately, Chris Pine is no Tom Cruise.) After the death of his estranged father, he receives a shaving kit full of $100 bills and instructions to give them to a mysterious other family he didn't know he had. Sam's long-lost sister (Elizabeth Banks) is a recovering alcoholic with a delinquent kid, and instead of just handing her the money, we spend a very long movie with Sam pathologically lying and cozying up to her for reasons that don't make any sense. Michelle Pfeiffer attempts to cry through her Botox, and it's hard to feel much sympathy for people too stupid to ask the obvious questions. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Prometheus ★★ Director Ridley Scott's space odyssey attempts to rework remnants of his 1979 masterpiece Alien by ditching the blue-collar reality and lean screenwriting in favor of enough gaseous philosophizing about the origin of the species to fuel a dorm-room bong session. Alas, we're back in Chariots of the Gods territory, with extraterrestrial thugs foiling creationism while a band of scientists follow clues from some ancient cave paintings to a distant planet, hoping to meet our makers. From moment to moment, Prometheus is gorgeous. The best-looking stupid movie I've seen in years, the film is a triumph of production design but a screenwriting disaster. Starting with Noomi Rapace's Christian Darwinist (hello, contradictions), these characters refuse to abide by any sort of logic. There's a nifty performance by Michael Fassbender as an android obsessed with Lawrence of Arabia, but most of his actions remain inexplicable. It's more like a trailer for the inevitable sequels. In space, no one can hear you groan. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Rock of Ages NO STARS Pulverizing, excruciating, incompetent—I don't have enough pejoratives at my disposal. Based on the smash Broadway hit, it's the kind of corporate turd that you can imagine a ton of Midwestern tourists eating up before bingeing on chicken wings at a Times Square chain restaurant. Everything here has been so sanitized for mass consumption that director Adam Shankman should keep his ServSave certificate next to his Directors Guild card. Nonentities Diego Boneta and Julianne Hough star as a couple of dreamers on a PG version of the Sunset Strip, belting out Journey and Starship songs because the movie thinks that's rock 'n' roll rebellion. Hambone performances abound, including a desperate turn by Tom Cruise as an Axl Rose wannabe. Cruise tries so hard to be funny that his scenes are drenched in flop sweat. An hour into this thing, I turned to a colleague and quietly announced: "I want to murder myself." (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Safety Not Guaranteed ★★ Aubrey Plaza's disdain gets such a workout every week on Parks and Recreation that she's become the poster girl for scorn made sexy. Finally given her own vehicle, Plaza does her best to carry a wheezy collection of Sundance stereotypes on her shoulders, but Safety Not Guaranteed is one of those half-finished films that plays better at festivals. As an intern for a trendy magazine, Plaza finds herself investigating a classified ad placed by a purported time-traveler who's really just a mentally ill dollar-store clerk. Subject to the whims of her hedonistic boss (a very funny Jake M. Johnson), Plaza's character cozies up with this adorable crackpot and the love story blooms in time with some acoustic guitar montages. Produced by indie exemplars Jay and Mark Duplass, Safety Not Guaranteed suffers from their trademark twee music cues, garbage cinematography and tiny wisp of a script. Plaza can carry a movie, just not this one. (At Boston Common, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Seeking a Friend for the End of the World ★★ Yeah, it's the end of the world, again. Only this time it's cuddly. Steve Carell and Keira Knightley star as mismatched soul mates staring down the apocalypse in writer/director Lorene Scafaria's (uncredited) rip-off of 1998's Last Night. Carell once again plays the downtrodden chump, and Knightley is a girl who wears chipped dark nail polish and listens to vinyl. There's the germ of a good movie in here, with a strong supporting cast of stand-up comedians playing folks marching toward doomsday in a wave of goofy excess. The film's best scene finds a still-open T.G.I. Friday's that's turned into an orgy with jalapeno poppers. Alas, we're stuck with Carell and Knightley as our tour guides for the end of days, and he just mopes around listening to records while she cries and sleeps. There's an entire world out there that's just about to end, and this movie zooms in on the two least interesting people in it. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Snow White and the Huntsman ★ ½ That mirror on the wall that Charlize Theron is constantly consulting is obviously broken, because it keeps telling her that Kristen Stewart's Snow White is the fairest of them all. Fairer than Charlize Theron? Yeah, right. This year's second reworking of the Grimm fairy tale plunges into Lord of the Rings territory, with director Rupert Sanders shoplifting images and a self-serious tone from every swords-and-CGI opus from the past few years. Theron vamps it up at late-career Faye Dunaway levels as the wicked queen, while Chris Hemsworth aches in the background as the titular huntsman, pining away with little to do besides lend the movie a Twilight-style love triangle. Things get really weird when a spate of Britain's finest character actors (Ian McShane, Ray Winstone, Bob Hoskins, etc.) find their heads grafted onto tiny bodies as Snow White's dwarf sidekicks, but the movie remains as inert as Stewart's slouchy, disinterested performance. She looks as bored as I felt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Take This Waltz ★★★ ½ The marginalization of movie theaters continues with Magnolia Pictures releasing titles via Video on Demand upwards of a month prior to theatrical release. This is a thorny issue, but however one chooses to see Sarah Polley's heartfelt sophomore directorial effort, it's a film worth watching. Michelle Williams stars as a happy housewife settled into a routine with her hubby of five years, played with affable obliviousness by Seth Rogen. But everything ruptures once she meets their new neighbor (Luke Kirby), a shy artist who trots around in a rickshaw and secretly yearns for the married lady across the street. Keenly sensitive to the inconvenience of desire, Polley (who also wrote the screenplay) dances around their tentative courtship, with the couple increasingly weighed down by the knowledge that their happiness will only result in misery for others. A couple of misjudged surreal flourishes muck up the movie's lived-in rhythm, but is there a subtler, more emotionally transparent actress than Williams working today? Her silences speak volumes. (At Kendall Square Cinema and available via Video On Demand.)

That's My Boy ★★ ½ Easy rule of thumb: Adam Sandler's box-office failures are his only interesting movies. Roundly rejected by audiences, the latest from his usually lazy Happy Madison productions is an obscene farce in which the comedian plays an alcoholic former tabloid-darling who impregnated his math teacher at age 14 and hasn't matured a day since. Broke and facing jail time, he seeks out the long-lost product of that illegal assignation, a hedge fund manager (Andy Samberg) who was unfortunately named Han Solo by his teen dad. The foulmouthed father crashes the poor kid's fancy wedding reception, launching a stunning number of scatological set pieces that include getting it on with a grandma and somebody ejaculating on the wedding dress. Sandler has, hypocritically, been making family films for so long, That's My Boy's adolescent vulgarity at least feels honest. Like most Sandler pictures, it's indifferently photographed and a half hour too long, but God help me, I laughed. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Kin Folk

Delta Berserk

Drawing on both musical and family harmony, the six members of Delta Rae have earned a reputation for their charged live performances. Siblings Ian, Eric and Brittany bring a shared history to the group, and the other three members add to the cohesive sound. Their debut album, Carry the Fire, combines bluegrass, gospel and pop while tapping into folklore traditions and a knack for lyrical storytelling. See them light up the stage on July 15 at Brighton Music Hall.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

WHERE IT'S HAT

Party in the Park

Picture the Royal enclosure at Ascot, or Churchill Downs on Derby Day. Transplant that image to a lavishly decorated tent on the Fenway, subtract the horse race, keep the Champagne and luscious food, and throw in a performance by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. What you've got is Party in the Park, a luncheon to benefit the Emerald Necklace Conservancy.

Also known as "the Hat Party," the event creates a noticeable uptick in the local millinery trade—and because of brims, veils and potentially lethal fascinators, air-kissing is obligatory.

The most amusing spectacle, though, is the organizers trying to get everyone from the reception into the tent to sit down for lunch, which is worse than herding cats. It's like herding cats with ADD away from an overturned milk truck.

Present and accounted for: cochairs Janet Atkins, Lynne Pantano Dale, Holly Safford and Jane Roy (who dared to go bareheaded!), vice-chairs Ellie Cornish Chu, Christine Cusick and Florence Everett, and such lovelies as Beacon Hillbilly Biddy Owens, blonde beauty Kristen Daly, the ethereal Trevania Henderson, toothsome chatterbox Beth Dickerson, a woman who busted out what had to be north of $100,000 worth of emerald jewelry and so on and so forth through the crème de la femininity of this town (which includes a few boys).

An unfortunate bit of excitement unfolded at Corrine Grousbeck's table, where a woman required the Heimlich maneuver, but overall, it was a perfectly lovely party.

The best exchange: When Michael Dukakis stepped up to the microphone and one guest tried to shush another, the person said, "I never listened to him when he was governor. Why should I listen to him now?"

Where's Molly Ringwald When You Need Her?

What's hot and pink and a party par excellence?

Sofia Ostrer and Daniela Winston at Party in the Park

Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney and Corinne Grousbeck at Party in the Park

Ashley Bernon and Suhail Kwatra at the Hot Pink Party

Deborah Norville, John Kerry, revelers and gospel choir members at the Hot Pink Party

Joel Benjamin at the BCAE

Paul Niski at the BCAE

The Hot Pink Party, a benefit for the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, took place at the InterContinental Boston—and in keeping with the evening's late honoree, Evelyn Lauder, it was a beautiful, gracious and memorable affair.

Attendees included her husband, Leonard, perky blonde TV personality Deborah Norville, lantern-jawed Senator John Kerry and his activist wife, Teresa Heinz, honorees Elisha Daniels and Sandy Krakoff, brunette minx Linda Waintrup and the dashing Dan, yummy mummy Abigail Ross Goodman and her handsome other half, Marc, and one woman who confided, "I actually hate the color pink."

Be that as it may, the flowers were beautiful, the room looked lovely and the jelly beans on the tables were delicious. There was laughter, a few tears, several entertaining speeches and a gospel choir that got even the stodgiest Bostonians on their feet.

The evening's funniest remark came from one of the speakers: "Studies suggest that donating to charity gives you an endorphin rush. I hope you're all high."

Words With Friends

It was a red-letter day, as the LGBT community partied at the BCAE.

The Boston Center for Adult Education kicked off Gay Pride month with the opening of the multimedia art exhibit Pride: 40 Years of Protest and Celebration.

The shindig, held in its Arlington Street headquarters, attracted the likes of silver fox Joel Benjamin, the arrestingly handsome John Koss, twinkalicious program director Clark Crowley, Charles Street dreamboat Paul Niski, and stud-muffin mixologist Alejandro Alvarez, to name a mere handful.

The art was impressive, the bartenders were hot, and you wouldn't expect the crowd to be anything less than fabulous, including the person who said, after a friend asked if he could borrow his blazer, "Um… it might be a little snug on you." ×××
